Eight PGCPS Students Awarded Posse Scholarships

Posse Scholars Receive Full Four-Year College Scholarships to Select Institutions

By PRESS OFFICER
PGCPS

UPPER MARLBORO, MD—Eight Prince George's County Public Schools (PGCPS) seniors have been named Posse Scholars and will receive four-year, full-tuition college scholarships from The Posse Foundation's partnering schools.

Next fall, Posse Scholars from across the nation will enter colleges and universities in multicultural groups of 10 known as "posses." Throughout their college career, they will support each other and receive ongoing assistance from The Posse Foundation. Posse Scholars have a 90 percent college graduation rate and demonstrated potential to positively impact their professions.

Each scholarship is worth approximately $140,000. Thirty-two PGCPS students have received Posse scholarships since 2013.

"Thanks to the generosity of the Posse Foundation, our students are able to realize their dreams of higher education," said Dr. Kevin M. Maxwell, Chief Executive Officer. "We are proud that our latest class of Posse Scholars continues the proud tradition of excellence, scholarship, leadership and ambition."

Opiate Declines in Maryland Prisons After Cut From Medicaid List

By HANNAH LANG
Capital News Service

ANNAPOLIS, MD—Since Suboxone film strips were removed from the Medicaid Preferred Drug List in July, the amount of the drug recovered in Maryland correctional facilities as contraband has decreased by 41 percent, according to Maryland's Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services.

Suboxone—a drug used to treat opiate addiction—has a high risk of addiction and dependence, and can even lead to death when paired with other drugs or alcohol, according to the Food and Drug Administration.

The medication is easily smuggled into state prisons and jails when it is in the form of a strip, designed to be placed under a user's tongue, said Gary McLhinney, the director of professional standards at the Maryland Department of Public Safety and Corrections.

"It is an epidemic, the amount of Suboxone that comes in," said

Terry Kokolis, the director of corrections for Anne Arundel County, Maryland, at Wednesday's meeting of the legislature's Joint Committee on Behavioral Health and Opioid Use disorders. "Strips come in, they're sold, they're bartered, they're cut into four pieces and the inmate population is always looking for Suboxone. It's the preferred drug."

In May, the Maryland Medicaid Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee made recommendations for the Medicaid Preferred Drug List.

The Department of Health and Mental Hygiene removed Suboxone from the preferred list and instead made comparable Zubsolv tablets preferred on July 1, making Maryland the first state to do so.

The tablets are more difficult to smuggle into prison than the film strips, which can be easily concealed.

If a drug is on the Medicaid Preferred Drug List, a person

MITCHELLVILLE, MD—Last week, the Prince George's County Economic Development Corporation Team (EDC) rang in the holidays by hosting its Annual Holiday Extravaganza at the Country Club at Woodmore to express its appreciation to the business community for their continued support, commitment and dedication to making Prince George's County the best place in the world to do business. EDC President and CEO Jim Coleman welcomed over 300 business leaders, State and County officials, and EDC Board members to the festive gathering. Among those joining in the festivities were Maryland Senate Majority Leader Douglas J.J. Peters, County Councilmember Todd Turner, and the County's Assistant Deputy Chief Administrative Officer David Iannucci. Also in attendance were EDC Board members Marva Jo Camp, Thomas Graham, Eric Henderson, and Sylvia Syphax.

Quitline Provides Free Services to Help Marylanders Quit Tobacco

By PRESS OFFICER
DHMH

BALTIMORE, MD—Quitting tobacco use is the single most important step a tobacco user can take to improve the length and quality of his or her life. According to the American Lung Association, within 20 minutes of smoking that last cigarette, a smoker's body begins a series of changes. The longer a person goes without using tobacco, the larger the benefit to his or her health. The start of a new year provides an opportunity for Marylanders to formalize a plan for kicking their tobacco habits and to start enjoying the benefits of healthier lives.

"We know how difficult it can be and how many attempts it can take to quit tobacco for good, which is why we are pleased to offer the free, effective, and confidential Maryland Tobacco Quitline to state residents," said Secretary Dennis R. Schrader.

Equipped with a good plan, residents trying to quit can work through symptoms of withdrawal and become tobacco-free. Five steps that can help:

1. Set a quit date. The start of a new year is a great time to quit, along with many other people around the country. Or choose another quit day within the next 2 weeks.

2. Get support. Share your quit date with the important people in your life and seek support. The Maryland Tobacco Quitline offers free, effective, and confidential coaching for Maryland residents 13 and older, and offers free patches or gum to eligible participants. Tobacco users can call 1-800-QUIT-NOW or can visit www.smokingstopshere.com to enroll in the program.

3. Anticipate and plan for challenges. The urge to use tobacco is short, usually only 3 to 5 minutes. Before your quit day, write down healthy ways to cope.

4. Remove cigarettes, other tobacco, ashtrays, and lighters

Movie Review: Jackie

It's a compelling portrait of grief, but it's more than that: a portrait of public grief. With noble grace, Jackie accepts the terribly unfair fact that she can't run off and mourn in private, that her husband's legacy will be defined in part by what she does in these next few days.

2-alarm fire at Tucker Road closes rink; try the Sculpture Garden for ice-skating

As I was going to press encouraging you to go ice-skating at the Tucker Road Ice Rink, I got word of a 2-alarm fire there. I don't know how long the rink will be closed—or even if it is. You can call 301-265-1525 for information.

Or if you might plan to ice-skate at the National Gallery of Art's Sculpture Garden in Washington. It's magic! Fees are $7.50–$8.50, with $3 skate rental; locker rental, 50¢ ($5 deposit required). Hours: Mon.–Thurs., 10 a.m.–9 p.m.; Fri., 10 a.m.–11 p.m.; Sat., 11 a.m.–11 p.m.; Sun., 11 a.m.–9 p.m. Info: 202-216-9397. And it's open through March 12.

Dr. Mudd House founder honored

The last weekend of the regular 2016 season, the Dr. Samuel A. Mudd House Museum in Waldorf received an important addition: an oil portrait of Louise Mudd Arehart, the driving force behind the transformation of the House from a private resident into a Maryland Historic Trust site on the National Register of Historic Places.

Her daughter Shirley Mudd-Cox Cook, of Wallingford, Pa., commissioned the portrait and was there to present it. Docents in period costume, members of the Dr. Mudd Society and the Mudd family were present, along with a Maryland Independent reporter. By the way, Louise Mudd Arehart was my first cousin, once removed.

Morningside Memories

From the Morningside 50th Anniversary book by Charles Kiker: “Morningside in the beginning was nothing more than an area of woods and farmlands with a few scattered houses mixed in. As early as 1938, developers Morgan Wayson and Randolph Hopkins began developing Morningside. ... the area had already been named Morningside by an unknown person who was said to have rationalized its name by the location on the East Side of the Capitol and the morningside of Washington, D.C. ... no one to date has been able to suggest a more plausible explanation of the Town's name.”

Longtime member of Unity Presbyterian dies at 93

Dorothy E. Norell, of District Heights, a “Rosie the Riveter” during WWII, died Dec. 14. She was 93.

She was born in North Dakota, daughter of Nels and Helga Mahlum, and attended school in Fingal, N.D., where she met her husband Kenneth. They moved to Seattle during WWII, and Dorothy worked for Boeing. They later settled in District Heights where they raised their family. She was an active member of District Heights (now, Unity) Presbyterian Church.

Her husband Kenneth preceded her in death. She is survived by her children, Terry, Nancy, Janet, Dean, Randy and Patti; siblings, Dale Mahlum and Donna Gulland; nine grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

She enjoyed travel, bridge, gardening, cooking, reading, spending time with her family and, in later years, according to her obituary, “she faithfully got spiritual nourishment watching The Hour of Power.”

WSSC ePermitting is Here Save Time and Money on Your Construction and Development Projects

LAUREL, MD—Skip the trip! ePermitting has arrived at WSSC to improve the permitting experience and streamline projects. Paper applications for permits and permit-related services are no longer accepted. The new system will improve service particularly to plumbers, gasfitters, sewer and drain cleaners, developers and engineers.

“ePermitting is one of many examples along the journey to providing world class customer service to our customers,” says Carla A. Reid, WSSC

GM/CEO. “WSSC is simplifying this process to make it easier to get business done.”

In anticipation of the ePermitting launch, the WSSC Permit Services Unit conducted several training sessions to acclimate customers to the new system.

“We are excited to offer this tool that will streamline projects for our customers and save them multiple trips for information,” said Luis Tapia, WSSC Permit Services Unit Coordinator. “Users can now access and track account information from home, work or a job site.”

System registration is required for ePermitting to obtain permits, licenses, plan review and approvals as well as inspections for your home and/or business needs in Prince George's and Montgomery counties. Need help? Online tutorials are available to customers as well as frequently asked questions.

Registered users can:

- Apply, track and manage permits
 - Apply for and/or renew a license
 - Schedule or cancel an inspection
 - Receive real-time inspection results and status notifications
 - View, manage and track plan review applications
 - View invoices and pay fees
- Registration is free and does not need to be renewed. Note: Only WSSC-registered principal master plumbers, gasfitters and their designated proxy(s) can apply for Plumbing and/or Fuel Gas Permits and schedule or cancel inspections.

Customers with questions about ePermitting or permit business processes, email to OneStopShop@wsscwater.com and include a phone number.

If you experience technical issues, email to ePermitting-Support@wsscwater.com and include a phone number. You can also reach the Permit Services Unit at 301-206-4003.

WSSC Again Receives AAA Ratings From All Three Financial Rating Agencies $382 Million Bonds Competitively Sold to Bank of America Merrill Lynch

LAUREL, MD—WSSC once again earned AAA bond ratings from all three financial rating agencies: Fitch Ratings, Standard & Poor's and Moody's Investor Service.

According to Fitch Ratings, the AAA rating is a reflection of WSSC's “strong financial record through the last economic downturn, a low liability burden and considerable financial flexibility.” Fitch further notes WSSC's “extraordinary revenue-raising capacity ... water-sewer rates and fees alone have funded district financial operations, including debt service since WSSC's inception, providing considerable future flexibility should it be needed.”

“Our approach to fiscal responsibility and professional budgeting practices is once again validated,” said WSSC General Manager and CEO Carla A. Reid. “I commend CFO Joe Beach and the entire WSSC financial team in helping maintain WSSC's high financial standards. Maintaining this exceptional rating from all three agencies means WSSC can secure the lowest possible interest rates on our capital borrowing, ultimately saving our customers money.”

In November WSSC competitively sold $382 million in bonds to Bank of America Merrill Lynch. The bonds will fund a variety of capital projects, including replacing aging water main lines and upgrading our water and wastewater treatment plants.

Valencia McClure Named a “Corporate Executive Trailblazer” by the Presidents' RoundTable and PRT Reach Foundation

BALTIMORE, MD—BGE Vice President of Governmental and External Affairs Valencia McClure was recognized for her community leadership and commitment by the Presidents' RoundTable (PRT), an organization of African-American entrepreneurs in the Baltimore and Washington, D.C. region. The PRT, in conjunction with their charitable arm, the PRT Reach Foundation, presented McClure with the “Corporate Executive Trailblazer Award” at the organization's annual scholarship event.

“Valencia is an advocate for growth and development in our region,” said Sheila Brooks, founder, president and chief executive officer of SRB Communications, LLC, who also serves as the president of PRT. “We are delighted to honor Valencia for her tireless contributions to a great many organizations, including the PRT Reach Foundation.”

“Like the Presidents' RoundTable and PRT Reach Foundation, BGE values Valencia's commitment to building bridges across the municipalities and communities we serve,” said BGE Senior Vice President of Regulatory and External Affairs, Alex Núñez. “Her leadership was evident throughout BGE's 200th anniversary celebration, including legacy gifts that we are pleased to give to our customers. We are proud of Valencia for her accomplishment and congratulate her on this well-deserved honor.”

McClure is the second BGE executive to receive the “Corporate Executive Trailblazer” award from the PRT and PRT Reach Foundation; CEO Calvin G. Butler Jr. was honored in 2014.

BGE named McClure vice president of Governmental and External Affairs in April 2016. She oversees the company's interactions with state and local governments, large customers and nonprofit organizations. Her responsibilities also include economic development and marketing. McClure, recently named one of the Baltimore Sun's “Top 25 Women to Watch,” is an active civic and community leader. She currently serves as president of the American Association of Blacks in Energy (AABE) Baltimore Chapter. She is also on the board of visitors for the Uni-

Resolve to Replace Your Bad Financial Habits

Most people have at least one bad financial habit. Whether it's impulse shopping, forgetting to pay bills on time or putting off building that emergency fund, balancing what you want to do and what you "should" do is never easy. The new year is the perfect time to identify potential financial weak points and replace bad habits with productive ones.

Start by identifying your bad habits. Sometimes a bad financial habit is easy to identify. For example, there might be a growing stack of bills in the kitchen that you willfully ignore. Others may be subtler, or perhaps they've become so ingrained that you do them without thinking twice.

Not sure where to start? Looking through your previous months' expenses can help you identify expensive trends or one-off purchases that are part of a larger theme. Online or paper bank statements can make this particularly simple. If you have a budget, you likely already compare projected spending with actual spending on a monthly basis, if not, this might be a good time to start.

You might recognize a few of these common bad financial habits in your life:

- Paying bills after the due date.
- Paying only the minimum required on bills.
- Ignoring bills and letting them go to collections.
- Putting off saving for retirement or for a rainy day.
- Impulse shopping or "retail therapy."
- Not keeping track of how much debt you have.
- Taking on debt to pay for something you don't currently need.

Ultimately, all of these lead to spending more than you earn and in some cases, bad habits can have a cascading effect.

Try to figure out what's driving your behavior. You might need to figure out what triggers your behavior and the reward you perceive afterward before you can change a habit. However, triggers and rewards aren't always obvious.

For example, you might buy big-ticket items when they're on sale because you want to feel like you're accomplishing something by "saving" so much. Perhaps you could foster a similar feeling of accomplishment by investing the money in a tax-deferred retirement account and calculating how much it'll be worth after years of compound interest.

Aim for these healthy financial habits. What habits should you try to adopt? Budgeting is certainly a worthy activity, but also consider the following mix of behaviors and specific objectives that can help keep your finances in order.

• Pay bills on time. In addition to avoiding late-payment fees, making on-time payments is one of the most important factors in determining your credit score.

• Make paying down debt a priority. Rather than accruing interest, make a point to pay down debts as quickly as possible.

• Build and maintain an emergency fund. Having three to six months' worth of living expenses in savings can help cushion the blow from a financial or personal setback. You could start with a goal to put $1,000 aside and then build towards the full emergency fund.

• Save for retirement. You can put aside a percentage of your income for retirement and invest the money within a tax-advantage account, such as a 401(k) or IRA. Find a comfortable contribution amount to start with, and then try to increase it at least once during the year.

• Plan your large purchases. To help prevent impulse shopping from draining your budget, resolve to wait at least one day before buying anything that costs over $100 (or whatever amount makes sense for your budget). If you know there's a large purchase coming up, start saving early by setting a little money aside from each paycheck.

You might consider asking others for input during this process. Especially if you're having trouble identifying a bad habit or finding the motivation to change, sometimes an outside perspective can help.

Bottom line: Make a resolution to replace your bad financial habits with healthy ones this year. Start by identifying the habits you want to change and trying to figure out the trigger and reward that surround the behavior. Then, try to replace that behavior with something positive. After identifying and trying to change your personal financial habits, you might want to consider the financial practices you share with a spouse or significant other.

Civil Rights Reports Spotlight Eight Years Of Accomplishments, Lingering Challenges

By PRESS OFFICER
U.S. Department of Education

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Protecting our students' civil rights is fundamental to ensuring they receive a high-quality education. Two reports released today spotlight the challenges and achievements of the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR).

According to OCR's FY 2016 annual report, the number of complaints filed last fiscal year skyrocketed to a record 16,720 at a time when OCR's staffing levels remained at a near all-time low. Still, OCR has resolved more than 66,000 civil rights cases during the Obama Administration, according to a second narrative describing progress made toward educational equity through strong civil rights enforcement from 2009–2016.

The Department released the new reports during an event with U.S. Secretary of Education John B. King Jr., former Education Secretary Arne Duncan and Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights Catherine E. Lhamon, as well as Marian Wright Edelman, founder and president of the Children's Defense Fund.

"Much progress has been made in the past eight years, but much work remains to ensure all children enjoy equitable access to excellence in American education," said U.S. Education Secretary John B. King Jr. "These two reports highlight the ongoing vital necessity of OCR's work to eliminate discriminatory barriers to educational opportunity so our nation's students may realize their full potential."

Lhamon added, "We thank our school communities for palatable progress toward realizing the promises Congress has made decade after decade to our nation's students that their educational experiences should be fundamentally equal. Our investigations confirm ongoing need to safeguard those rights, as well as daily commitment from educators across the country to our core democratic value of fairness. We celebrate student victories and continue to stand ready to safeguard rights of students who need us."

Over the last eight years, one of the Obama Administration's highest priorities has been to protect the access of all students to a world-class education. As a result, the Department and OCR have seen significant progress in increasing educational equity nationwide and reducing discriminatory barriers that students face.

From FY 2009 to 2016, OCR:

- Received 76,022 complaints, with each year breaking the previous year's record of complaint receipts;
- Resolved 66,102 cases;
- Proactively initiated 204 investigations known as compliance reviews;
- Issued 34 policy guidance documents;
- Monitored, on average, about 2,000 resolved cases per year to ensure compliance with resolution agreements; and,
- Conducted three major national, state, school- and district-level Civil Rights Data Collection (CRDC) surveys.

The FY 2016 annual report details the work of OCR over the past year to secure equal educational opportunity by conducting investigations, monitoring schools under resolution agreements, providing technical assistance and administering the CRDC. In FY 2016, complaint volume increased to a record-high 16,720 complaints—a jump of more than 10,000 over the 6,364 complaints in FY 2009. During this same period, OCR resolved 8,625 cases overall—including 1,116 resolutions that secured changes protective of students' civil rights in schools around the nation—and initiated 13 proactive compliance reviews, despite a near record-low of 563 full-time employees. By contrast, OCR had about 1,100 staff in 1981.

Additionally, OCR released the latest Civil Rights Data Collection and, for the first time, made available the 2013-14 CRDC database for direct download by the public.

OCR also developed and released five policy guidance documents in FY 2016 and hosted 72 policy-related listening sessions with stakeholders on a variety of topics. Notable cases and their resolutions are described in both reports, including cases related to equitable access to courses and educational opportunities, racial harassment, equal opportunity for English learners, bullying and harassment, accessible technology for students with disabilities, and sexual harassment and violence.

For more information on the work of OCR, please visit the office's home page or its Reading Room which features policy documents, case resolutions, manuals, reports, religious exemptions and other materials.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Warm puffy jackets can protect from cold winter weather, but they can pose a danger when they are worn underneath a seat belt putting occupants, especially children, at risk of injury in the event of a crash. Seat belts for people of all ages are best worn close to the body and have long been proven to help the body slow down and protect the brain and spinal cord in the event of impact.

According to AAA Mid-Atlantic safety experts, for a child's car seat to offer the maximum protection in a crash, the harness or seat belt needs to be snug and as close to the child's body as possible. The more layers of padding or clothing between a child and the harness, the harder it is to properly fit the restraint. The seat belt can end up fitting to the puffy jacket, and when impact occurs, the jacket compresses and creates a gap between the passenger and the seat belt. That gap is like a loose seat belt that can cause a passenger to slip through the restraint or worse be ejected from the seat. The same concept applies to children riding in booster seats and adults in seat belts. Harness straps should lay flat and not have any twists. The seat belt should be snug enough that you cannot pinch any extra webbing or strap material at the child's shoulder.

"Car crashes are the number one killer of children up to age 13," says John B. Townsend II, Manager of Public Affairs for AAA Mid-Atlantic. "Parents should buckle their kids in car seats and seat belts without jackets first, then either tuck a blanket around them or have kids lay their jackets on their laps or wear it backwards. Seat belts need to be fitted to the passenger, not the jacket," says Townsend.

Another important consideration is that children do not need to wear heavy coats, hats and gloves in a warmed-up car. Too many layers can cause the child to become overheated and cranky, potentially causing a distraction for the driver. Even the smallest babies need only one more layer of clothing than their parents to remain comfortable.

Is there a better way? AAA experts offer methods for safely buckling a child into their seat during the cold, winter months.

• Warm up the car before your trip. Passengers won't feel the cold as much if the car is heated. This will allow passengers to wear seat belts comfortably without a jacket. Please note, that if you are warming the car with passengers inside, make sure that the exhaust pipe is cleared of snow so fumes don't back into the car.

• Lose the bulk, wear a thin coat in the car. Fleece outer wear is recommended because it is thin enough to work well under seat belts, yet warm enough to keep your child comfortable. Choose something more lightweight than a snow suit.

• The backwards coat. Secure the child in the car seat without their coat on and once the child is snugly strapped into the car seat, put their coat on them backwards. This method keeps the harness snug to the child and allows the child freedom to remove their coat if they get too warm.

• Open coat. Some coats and most fleece jackets are thin enough to wear safely in the car, however, an alternative is to have the child put their coat on but don't zip it up. Load the child into the car seat and secure the belt, making sure that it fits snugly.

• The "shower cap" style cover placed over the rear-facing infant carrier. This type of cover doesn't interfere with the harness at all and is easily opened or removed if the child starts to get too warm.

• Blanket and hat if needed. After securing your child's seat-belt, just tuck a blanket around him or her. Never fit a seat belt over the blanket. Children can also wear a hat and or gloves to help keep warm.

covered by Medicaid can obtain that drug for a small co-pay. If a drug is denoted as non-preferred, a person must get prior authorization from a doctor or prescriber in order for it to be covered or partially covered by Medicaid, according to the Maryland Medicaid Pharmacy Program.

On Sept. 23, 35 states—including Maryland—and Washington, D.C., filed a class action lawsuit against Indivior, the company that produces Suboxone. The states allege Indivior impeded the sale of generic versions of Suboxone in tablet form until it forced other generic alternatives out of the market, driving up the price of the film strips, according to a Sept. 27 release from Indivior.

The release is the only comment the company has on the lawsuit or on the Medicaid restrictions at this time, said a representative from Indivior.

Between July 1, when the film strips were removed from the Medicaid Preferred Drug List, and Oct. 31, the Department of Public Safety and Corrections has recovered 940 pieces of Suboxone film strips, compared to 1,603 recovered from July 1 to Oct. 31 in 2015.

"We've also had our teams monitor inmate calls and they're overhearing some frustration about not being able to obtain the strips behind the walls as easily as it was prior to July 1," said McLhinney.

The disparity between the asking price of contraband Suboxone strips has also sharply increased since July 1. The street price for a film strip is only $5, while the price behind bars can be up to $500, said McLhinney.

Typically, the film strips are cut into four pieces and sold separately within prisons to increase an inmate's profit margin, Kokolis said.

"We've done numerous cases where Suboxone has been smuggled in the jail behind stamps or in envelopes or where the paper was colored with Suboxone and then the inmate would get the paper and eat it," said Dan Alioto, the commander of the vice/narcotics division at the St. Mary's County Sheriff's Office.

Though the amount of the drug recovered in St. Mary's County has declined slightly since July, Suboxone strips are still being abused and traded for other drugs within jails and prisons, he told the University of Maryland's Capital News Service.

"I think it has slowed down, but it's still an old trick, so it takes a little while for the next thing to emerge," he said.

Local jails have become the "biggest detox facilities in the state of Maryland," Kokolis said. However, 85 percent of the prison and jail population who reported using drugs prior to being sentenced also reported using heroin within 24 hours of imprisonment, while they were incarcerated, he said.

"All of the good that we try to do is very easily compromised by the easy intake of Suboxone," he said.

Maryland officials are also working to collect more data on heroin and opioid use statewide, said Glenn Fueston, the executive director of the Governor's Office on Crime Control and Prevention.

"We need to make sure that we're getting more access to that data as a whole so we can make better decisions and better understand the current threat that we have," he said. "Understanding the threat is a very important part of this problem."

Cardin Lauds Effort to Permanently Block Oil and Gas Drilling on the Atlantic Coast

"Drilling Anywhere on the Atlantic Coast is a Threat Everywhere on the Atlantic Coast."

BALTIMORE, MD—U.S. Senator Ben Cardin (D-Md.), a senior member of the Environment and Public Works Committee, praised President Barack Obama's action to permanently protect the Atlantic Coast from the threats of oil and gas drilling. The action under Section 12(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (OCSLA) comes shortly after Senator Cardin and a dozen of his colleagues urged the president to take this necessary step to preserve the fragile ecosystem and the economy of the Atlantic Coast.

"For years, I have strongly opposed plans to expand drilling operations off the Atlantic Coast. This final act should permanently end any and all misguided attempts to endanger the economic viability and environmental health of the region. Oil spills and the damage associated with seismic exploration do not respect state boundaries, making drilling anywhere on the Atlantic Coast a threat everywhere on the Atlantic Coast," said Senator Cardin. "I thank President Obama for recognizing that repeated short-term measures to protect the Atlantic were not sufficient because the risks simply outweigh any potential benefits associated with drilling off the Atlantic Coast."

A copy of the Senators' letter recent to President Obama can be found by going to <https://www.cardin.senate.gov/download/senate-letter-on-ocsla>. In the letter, the Senators argue that the environment and economies of the Atlantic and Arctic Oceans would be threatened if offshore oil drilling were allowed. Fishing and tourism on the East Coast generates hundreds of billions of dollars in economic activity and supports hundreds of thousands of jobs. The oil industry's attempts to drill offshore in the Arctic have been riddled with safety lapses and mishaps, leading it to relinquish the bulk of the drilling leases that were held in the Arctic Ocean.

A member of the EPW committee since he arrived in the Senate, Senator Cardin has long been a leading voice calling on the Obama administration to abandon plans to drill off the Atlantic Coast. In April of 2015, he introduced legislation to prevent offshore drilling in the region.

Child Watch

Prayers for the Work Ahead for Our Children

This has been a trying year for so many children in America—confused, consumed by and afraid of the intolerance, hatred and anger of adults. How do we keep the promises we have made to our children? How do we make a better America that values each and every child, regardless of skin color, faith, gender, sexual orientation, disability or immigration status? How do we remind our political leaders with unwavering clarity that every child is sacred and that God did not make two classes of children? This is not a time to weep. This is a time for work to ensure justice.

As we look to a new year, here are a few prayers to help guide us for the work ahead.

O God, help us recover our hope for our children's sake.

Help us recover our courage for our children's sake.

Help us to recover our discipline for our children's sake.

Help us to recover our ability to work together for our children's sake.

Help us to recover our values for our children's sake.

Help us to recover a spirit of sacrifice for our children's sake.

Help us to recover our faith in Thee for our children's sake.

We pray and stand for children who need our voice.

We pray and stand for children blessed by parents who care and for children without a parent or anyone who cares at all.

We pray and stand for children filled with joy and hope and for children whose days and nights are joyless.

We pray and stand for children with hope and for children without hope whose spirits have been dimmed and dashed.

We pray and stand for children high on play and study and laughter and for children high on heroin, cocaine and ecstasy.

We pray and stand for children for whom we pray every day and for children who have no one to pray them along life's way.

We pray and stand for children poised by circumstance to soar and conquer life's challenges and for children bogged down by hunger and homelessness and violence and miseducation and struggling so hard to survive.

We pray and stand for children who love to read and for children who can't read at all, for children who learn with excitement and for children told by adults they cannot achieve.

We pray and stand for children who we expect and help to do well and for children whom no one believes in or helps succeed.

We pray for parents, grandparents, teachers, preachers, political and community leaders that we will be a help and not a hindrance for children we call our own and for all the children God created who are part of our family too.

O God, forgive and transform our rich nation where small babies die of cold quite legally.

O God, forgive and transform our rich nation where small children suffer from hunger quite legally.

O God, forgive and transform our rich nation where toddlers and school children die from guns sold quite legally.

O God, forgive and transform our rich nation that lets children be the poorest group of citizens quite legally.

O God, forgive and transform our rich nation that lets the rich continue to get more at the expense of the poor quite legally.

O God, forgive and transform our rich and powerful nation which thinks security rests in missiles and bombs rather than in mothers and in babies.

O God, forgive and transform our rich nation for not giving You sufficient thanks by giving to others their daily bread.

O God, help us never to confuse what is quite legal with what is just and right in Your sight.

Help us to stand together and vote to make America just and right for all Your children.

Racism and Hatred Have No Place On Our Nation's School Boards

"Mr. Paladino is an elected official charged with the responsibility to represent children and families in a district comprised of over 70% Black, Brown, Asian, Immigrant and other minority students and families; And, Mr. Paladino took an oath to ensure that students are afforded an environment which is free from fear and respects diversity within the school district and the community and is subject to all district policies; ... These unambiguously racist, morally repugnant, flagrantly disrespectful, inflammatory and inexcusable comments by Mr. Paladino have garnered both local, national, and international attention that reflects negatively on the Buffalo Board of Education, the City of Buffalo and its leadership and its citizens, the State of New York, and every decent human being in America and abroad who has been shocked and offended by his words;"

—Resolution by the Buffalo School Board demanding Carl Paladino's resignation

The national wave of racist, vicious invective unleashed by the 2016 Presidential campaign is well-documented. Hundreds of hate crimes have been reported to watchdog groups like the Southern Poverty Law Center. Social media is awash in cell-phone video of racially-motivated confrontations invoking the name of the President-elect.

But the recent hateful tirade of failed New York gubernatorial candidate Carl Paladino stands out among the others. Warning: his words are difficult to read.

When the Buffalo weekly newspaper Artvoice asked locals their hopes for 2017, many gave positive, community-minded answers: "A return to shopping in communities and brick-and-mortar stores," "the Bills get in the playoffs," or "more kindness." Carl Paladino hopes President "Obama catches mad cow disease after being caught having relations with a Hereford. He dies before his trial and is buried in a cow pasture next to Valerie Jarret, who died weeks prior, after being convicted of sedition and treason, when a Jihady cell mate mistook her for being a nice person and decapitated her."

What do Buffalonians want to see go away in 2017? "Hate." "Discrimination." "Preconceived stereotypes." Carl Paladino wants to see Michelle Obama "return to being a male and let loose in the outback of Zimbabwe where she lives comfortably in a cave with Maxie, the gorilla."

In response to the horrified national outcry over his reprehensible remarks, Paladino first rebuffed inquiring journalists with an obscenity, then penned a defiant non-apology, defending his words as "deprecating humor."

Paladino is certainly no stranger to this brand of so-called "humor." During his failed 2010 gubernatorial run, a local news site exposed racist and pornographic emails Paladino had shared with associates. While he lost the election in a landslide, garnering only a third of the vote, he managed to be elected to the Buffalo School Board in 2013.

The Buffalo School Board is to be commended for its swift rejection of Paladino's hateful statements, and its recognition that a man who holds such views cannot be entrusted with the education of children. If Paladino does not heed the demands of the Board and resign, we expect NYS Education Commissioner MaryEllen Elia to pursue his removal.

The President and CEO of our affiliate in Buffalo, Brenda W. McDuffie, has been outspoken on this issue, and we urge the entire Urban League community to unite in opposition to Paladino's hatefulness by signing the petition urging his removal.

In fairness, when ArtVoice asked Investigative Post editor Jim Heaney what he's like to see go away in 2017, Heaney responded, "Carl Paladino." We couldn't agree more.

Starting the New Year By Improving Relationships

Relationships come in many flavors. They range from very casual to quite close, such as those individuals we consider real friends, often people we have known for a long time. And closest of all, as you might expect, is usually with someone with whom we are romantically and emotionally involved, a spouse or a significant other.

But what many of us fail to appreciate is that all good relationships require work and that's especially true as a relationship ages. While it may often feel that our associations with others simply "happen," these connections require thought and effort if we want them to endure and grow.

One important step in strengthening a relationship is simply being accepting. No two people are exactly alike and what often helps establish a relationship is that each party brings something a little different to the association. However, over time, we may forget that some of those differences were what helped establish the initial relationship. We, instead, may unconsciously be trying to make the other person more like ourselves. It helps to step back, evaluate what makes that relationship special, and refocus on the positive things rather than the differences you may have.

Good relationships also have to be able to survive disagreements. There are going to be times when friends or spouses are going to have differing opinions about a particular subject, with each going in quite an opposite direction. While it might seem nice (if boring), if everyone agreed all the time, for a relationship to thrive it's necessary sometimes to accept the other person's thoughts and to simply agree to disagree.

Another basic element for a good relationship is being able to communicate with the other person. That sounds simple, but in our busy, often stressful world, it can be easy to ignore someone you care about without really meaning to do it.

The key is to take time to focus on how well you are communicating with those you care about. And that doesn't just mean sharing all of your ideas and problems. It means making time for the other person, asking questions and really listening, especially when there are problem areas.

Improving your relationships is a wonderful resolution to make for the New Year. And making it work isn't all that hard. It just requires paying more attention and making time to listen to and enjoy that other person.

Statement of Comptroller Regarding Updated Revenue Estimates

ANNAPOLIS, MD—The following is a statement from Maryland Comptroller Peter Franchot released today during a meeting of the Board of Revenue Estimates in the Treasury Building in Annapolis.

"I'd like to thank my fellow members of the Board of Revenue Estimates—Treasurer Nancy Kopp and Department of Business and Economic Development Secretary David Brinkley—as well as Bureau of Revenue Estimates Director Andrew Schaufele, his staff, and the Revenue Monitoring Committee for their hard work.

"Today, Maryland's Board of Revenue Estimates voted to reduce the revenue projections for the State of Maryland for Fiscal Years 2017 and 2018 by a total of $38.3 million, which is $13.8 million for Fiscal Year 2017 and $24.5 million for Fiscal Year 2018. These reductions underscore the reality that our economic recovery remains weak. Wages and incomes continue to grow at a subdued rate and many Marylanders and small business owners are still struggling.

"Our projections indicate that there will be three percent growth in our sales and use tax revenue for the current and the next fiscal years, which serves as a positive indicator that Marylanders are spending more. That's not a return to normal, but it is a step in the right direction.

"Whether it's a temporary indicator or a prolonged trend is uncertain. State policymakers can help by not doing harm to consumer confidence. We can't assume we're around the corner from returning to the way things have been in Maryland.

"We have to be more forward-looking about how we borrow money as a state because we can't sustain our current patterns of debt accumulation without provoking actions that could harm an already fragile economy. But if we maintain a cautious mindset, Maryland's economy is strong enough to withstand this slow recovery and return us to prosperity."

South County Economic Development Association Honors EDC President and CEO

Coleman: County is Experiencing Incredible Growth Today Thanks to The Power of One

By LORI C. VALENTINE
PGCEDC

OXON HILL, MD—On December 4, EDC President and CEO Jim Coleman was the guest speaker for the South County Economic Development Association's 20th Anniversary and Awards Gala. More than 350 South County residents, business leaders and elected officials turned out to support the community based organization that has been an advocate in Prince George's County for promoting economic development, particularly for small and minority businesses since 1996. Notable residents in attendance included NBC 4 News Anchor Pat Lawson Muse, who served as the emcee for the gala, State Senator C. Anthony Muse, who provided the invocation, SCEDA President Zeno St. Cyr, II, and Board Members Floyd Wilson, Jr., Guy Black and Lenward Hood. Mr. Coleman spoke to the capacity crowd about the power of one: making a difference in your future.

"All of us have known someone who has made a profound difference in our lives. Whether it was a single mother, a pastor or an organization like SCEDA. People like my own mother, whose caring, encouragement and commitment made a significant difference in my life," said Coleman. "Thanks to the power of one County Executive, Prince George's County is experiencing incredible growth today. By streamlining the permitting process, bringing ethics reform to County government and causing the County's crime rate to be the lowest it has been in 30-years, County Executive Baker's power of one has given developers confidence in Prince George's County. But now is not the time for cooling off. As President of the EDC, I want to leave no resident behind when it comes to the incredible spirit of growth that this County is experiencing. I congratulate community partners like SCEDA for working to provide County residents with more retail, better grocery options and companies that provide high wage jobs."

Mr. Coleman was also presented with SCEDA's Business Development Award as one of the award recipients at the holiday gala. Other honorees included Radio One CEO Cathy Hughes, County Fire Chief Marc Bashoor, County Councilmember Mel Franklin, The Wooten Group Managing Director Lorenzo Wooten, Jr., Dis-

Each of the awardees were recognized for their commitment to improving schools, public safety, economic development and transportation in South County.

"SCEDA has grown tremendously in the last 20 years, and we are proud of the work we have done; particularly in South County," said Zeno St. Cyr. "We are honored to have had a dynamo like EDC President Jim Coleman as our keynote speaker this evening. We are looking forward to doing bigger and better things in partnership with the Economic Development Corporation to help promote small and minority businesses and economic development in general, in Prince George's County."

Maryland Casinos Generate Record-Breaking $133.5 Million in Revenue During December

By PRESS OFFICER
MLGCA

BALTIMORE, MD—Highlighted by the opening of MGM National Harbor, Maryland's six casinos combined for a record-setting month in December 2016, generating $133,477,706 million in statewide gaming revenue. December surpassed the previous revenue record set in May 2016, when five casinos totaled $104,351,219 million.

MGM National Harbor in Prince George's County, which held its grand opening on Dec. 8, generated $41,934,028 from both slot machines and table games in just over three weeks.

Under Maryland law, casino revenue supports the Maryland Education Trust Fund as well as small-, minority- and women-owned businesses, local impact grants and the state's horse racing industry.

MGM National Harbor's contribution to the Education Trust Fund in December was $12,624,344. December 2016 contributions to the state from all six Maryland casinos are documented and available online at http://gaming.mdlottery.com/wp-content/uploads/2017/01/December_press_release_slots-TG-2.pdf.

"We anticipated that December would be a record-breaking month, and we are tremendously enthusiastic about the future of Maryland's casino program," said Maryland Lottery and Gaming Director Gordon Medenica. "MGM National Harbor is an outstanding facility in an ideal location, and we are confident that its success will fuel the continued growth of revenue that supports vital state programs."

Gross gaming revenue per unit per day in December at MGM National Harbor was: $313.59 for slot machines, $5,343.76 for banked table games and $1,508.57 for non-banked table games. MGM National Harbor operates 3,237 slot machines and 165 (126 banked and 39 non-banked) table games.

While the opening of MGM National Harbor attracted local, national and international attention, three of Maryland's first five casinos—Horseshoe Casino Baltimore, Casino at Ocean Downs and Rocky Gap Casino Resort—saw their revenues increase in December. Hollywood Casino Perryville and Maryland Live Casino saw decreases compared to December of 2015.

"Given the intense spotlight on the opening of MGM National Harbor, the December numbers for Maryland's other casinos are in line with our expectations, and we're pleased to see the increases at Ocean Downs, Rocky Gap and especially Horseshoe," Medenica said. "I am confident that as our casino program continues to evolve, each of the six casinos will establish its unique presence in the marketplace."

With MGM operating for only a partial month, Maryland Live Casino continued to generate the state's highest revenue, totaling $48,032,057 from both slot machines and table games in December. Maryland Live's gross gaming revenue per unit per day was: $255.60 for slot machines, $3,116.84 for banked table games and $1,160.97 for non-banked

OUT ON THE TOWN

ERIC D. SNIDER'S
IN THE DARK
Movie Review

Jackie

Jackie
Grade: A-
Rated R, a couple of F-words and several glimpses of JFK's brains
1 hr., 39 min

The first thing we hear in Jackie is Mica Levi's groaning, indispensable musical score, which conveys sonically the sensation of having the ground fall out from under you. It accompanies our first sight of Natalie Portman as the newly widowed Jackie Kennedy, who, with equal parts steely-eyed dignity and devastation, looks like the music sounds. Thanks to this perfect pairing of sound and image, we're instantly in the film's grip.

It doesn't let go, either, nor does it deviate much from the intent suggested by those first moments. This is the story of the JFK assassination and its aftermath as experienced by Jackie, filtered through her emotions and memories. The objective facts (as far as they're known) are accounted for and respected—director Pablo Larraín (NO) is an expert at historical recreation—but it's a highly subjective film, often impressionistic, more mood piece than docudrama.

The framing device is that a journalist (Billy Crudup) has come to Jackie's home to interview her just days after the funeral—an obscene imposition on a grieving widow, but a necessary part of the national healing process. Jackie is painfully aware of her position as a private citizen who has an obligation to let the people hear from her. She tells the reporter that he can only print what she approves, and she calmly informs him several times over the course of their conversation that something she has just said didn't happen. (The people must not hear of her chain smoking, for instance.) There is no debate over these terms. She's Jacqueline Kennedy; the journalist doesn't even have a name.

Jackie is a searing and intimate portrait of one of the most important and tragic moments in American history, seen through the eyes of the iconic First Lady, then Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy (Natalie Portman). Jackie places us in her world during the days immediately following her husband's assassination. Known for her extraordinary dignity and poise, here we see a psychological portrait of the First Lady as she struggles to maintain her husband's legacy and the world of "Camelot" that they created and loved so well.

The interview structure lets the film hopscotch dreamily through time, like flipping back and forth through the pages of a book. We see contrasting scenes of Jackie looking in the mirror on Air Force One: first preparing herself to smile and wave from the Dallas motorcade with her husband (played by Caspar Phillipson), later smoothing her clothes and wiping the blood from her face in the aftermath. We see the making of her famous 1962 White House tour video, where she seems surprisingly ill-at-ease in front of the camera, a hint that she wasn't the perfectly poised queen of Camelot that America wanted her to be.

We see snippets of the assassination itself, a signature moment in American mythology from which Larraín and screenwriter Noah Oppenheim have wrung new, fresh emotional horror. We see Jackie being comforted by Robert Kennedy (Peter Sarsgaard), by White House social secretary Nancy Tuckerman (Greta Gerwig), by the awkwardly deferential Lyndon Johnson (John Carroll Lynch) and Lady Bird (Beth Grant), by a priest (John Hurt). Jackie is dazed, shell-shocked, flitting in and out of conversations, constantly torn from her reverie to deal with some painfully quotidian concern like clearing JFK's things out of the Oval Office or planning the funeral.

It's a compelling portrait of grief, but it's more than that: a portrait of public grief. With noble grace, Jackie accepts the terribly unfair fact that she can't run off and mourn in private, that her husband's legacy will be defined in part by what she does in these next few days. She knows, though she doesn't like it, that optics and symbols are important, and that every detail of the funeral and her public behavior will be scrutinized for its significance.

Through it all, in public and private, Portman's portrayal of Jackie is almost startlingly immersive. She impersonates the voice and accent, sure, but more than that, she brings all of Jackie's internal struggles to the surface as she navigates the slow-moving nightmare she's found herself in. Even in her vulnerable moments, she's an icon of strength, and the film is an invaluable glimpse into the mind and heart of a tragic figure.

EDC Holiday from A1

ness partners' and making 2017 even better!"

David Iannucci, who spoke to the holiday gathering on behalf of County Executive Rushern L. Baker, III who is currently out of town, also expressed his excitement about the progress the EDC, along with its partners at FSC First have accomplished this year. The Baker Administration attributes the great progress taking place in the County to thoughtful planning.

"The success the County is currently experiencing is no accident," said Iannucci. "The County had a plan that dealt with public safety and education. The missing link was economic development. None of this success is possible with the private sector believing in Prince George's County. Now, true economic development is happening in Prince George's County with MGM's grand opening, the Regional Medical Center breaking ground in the Spring, and, we believe, the FBI coming to Prince George's County."

Many of the business leaders in attendance expressed their appreciation for the support the EDC provides to small businesses through the Small Business Development office and Workforce Services Division.

"I am delighted to be here to say 'thank you' to the Prince George's County Economic Development Corporation for all the help I received from them," said Laverne Johnson, owner of Security Education Environmental Design Services, LLC, a minority, woman-owned security safety consultant business in Temple Hills, MD. "From business plan assistance through getting Small Business Administration 8A certification, the EDC has been with me every step of the way."

Holiday Extravaganza sponsors included Safeway, Marva Jo Camp, Esq., Forestville Plaza and Carrollton Enterprises.

"This evening was a great opportunity for Safeway, along with other corporations to network with small business owners, who give life into the community," said Stephanie Ridore,

Safeway Labor Relations Manager. "The partnership Safeway has established with the EDC has been a tremendous success in bringing more jobs into the community, and we believe will continue to grow."

Join the EDC on January 19th for its Clean Tech Demo Day where commercial real estate brokers and investors can learn energy solutions from clean tech entrepreneurs to reduce energy costs and increase competitiveness. This event will take place at EDC Headquarters, 1801 McCormick Drive, Suite 140, Largo, MD 20774.

A Majority-Immigrant Church, Vandalized With 'Trump Nation/Whites Only,' Becomes a Site of Resistance

The Hillandale Shopping Center in Silver Spring, Maryland is like a thousand you have seen before. Located at a highway intersection, the strip mall includes a Mattress Warehouse, a Chipotle, and of course a Starbucks. Reflecting the pockets of immigrant poverty in the immediate area, there is also a Value Village and several boarded-up storefronts. Flying above the mostly low-income commercial block is an American flag on a towering flagpole.

Across Powder Mill Road, nestled just off the highway, is an ornate brick house of worship called the Episcopal Church of Our Saviour. Like the Hillandale Shopping Center, this is a church that reflects the surrounding community. The immigrants who make up 80 percent of the congregation have come to the United States from 50 different countries.

On the morning of Sunday, November 13, Father Robert Harvey was on his way to the church to deliver a sermon about the impact of Donald Trump's election. His goal was to soothe the nerves of his congregants. He said, "We had been hearing more and more about fear among our members about what could happen to their families if Trump was elected."

He was going to speak to them about "Jewish exiles in Babylon, and how the prophet Jeremiah told them to pray for the good fortune of the country where they currently live. And the word in Jeremiah is 'For in their prosperity, you will find your prosperity.'"

That plan was turned on its head when Father Robert, as he is called, arrived at the church:

[I] noticed a message written in what looked like a thick permanent marker on our memorial garden wall that said "Trump Nation. Whites Only." And then, when I went out to the other side of the church I saw the same message written on our banner that advertises our mass in Spanish with deep [knife] cuts into the sign.

Father Robert showed me the faintly visible markings of the message. Their efforts to blast it off the brick walls are proving to be more difficult than they anticipated.

Father Robert had to alter his sermon on the fly from one of hope in a perilous time to one speaking hard truths. He said, "This particular campaign has opened up racial scars and wounds that have been in this country for yea ... Please be aware of how close to home this has hit. This is literally now, quite literally, right outside our windows."

Father Robert was distraught but not as shocked as many in the congregation. He said to me:

Two days after the election, at the Hillandale Shopping Center, I saw an elderly Latina woman being humiliated by two big white guys. They were calling her a spic and to go back to Mexico. And I was walking through the parking lot and she was standing there shaking violently, and I put my arm around her and I said, 'Guys, this is unacceptable, buzz off.' And they said with menace, 'You don't tell us what to do!' I threatened to call the police and they scattered. A couple yards away, there were two Muslim women, in full garb. They said to me, 'We saw those guys too. They'd been standing there for a while. It's almost as if they were positioned there to humiliate anyone, there, who did not look like them.'"

The fear among the congregants at the Episcopal Church of Our Saviour is real, but the community response to the vandalism has been remarkable. Homemade signs, chalkings and banners now adorn the inside and the outside of the church with messages in a variety of languages such as, "You are always welcome here," "Resist hate," "Our community is strong," "We are one people," and "In God we love."

There is also now a massive printed banner in front of the church that reads, "Silver Spring loves and welcomes all immigrants." The banner, visible from the highway, is like a steely glare aimed at anyone who wants this church and these congregants to disappear.

"The community has been overwhelmingly positive and supportive and caring," Father Robert told me.

We've had a synagogue in Washington, D.C. whose rabbi and congregants were here on Monday offering prayers, an imam and members of his congregation came to offer their prayers, and an absolute outpouring from all the Christian denominations in the area ... I'm tired but I'm also very hopeful because of this outpouring ... We are now looking towards turning the church into a site for racial reconciliation, a place where those kinds of conversations can happen. I want our church to be at the forefront of that. This is supposed to be a safe place for all people and we want that to be the case.

EARTH TALK ... What Will Be Obama's Environmental Legacy?

Dear EarthTalk:

Now that his second term is winding down, what will President Barack Obama's environmental legacy look like?

—Mary Danson,
Littleton, NH

The environment may not have been one of candidate Barack Obama's signature issues in the run-up to the 2008 election; nonetheless, environmentalists were pleased that he won. The non-partisan League of Conservation Voters (LCV) gave Obama an 86 percent rating back then for his Congressional voting track record on bills related to the environment. (His Republican opponent, John McCain, scored a paltry 24 percent according to LCV's standards.) But even though Obama was talking the talk on emissions reductions, clean energy and other hot button green issues, environmentalists worried that other higher priority concerns could distract the well-meaning young president from focusing on saving the planet.

But cut to the present eight years later, and a much grayer Obama has not only walked the green walk, but will go down in history as one of the greatest environmental presidents of all time. Chief among his sustainability-oriented accomplishments is steering the nation toward a future with fewer greenhouse emissions. One major step was pushing through the Clean Power Plan, calling on electric utilities to reduce their carbon emissions by 32 percent of 2005 levels within 10 years. The plan, which will likely be decided by the U.S. Supreme Court in 2017, is a key part of Obama's efforts to fight global warming. Obama worked hard to finalize the plan in plenty of time for other countries participating in international climate talks to make similarly strong commitments in time for the December 2015 Paris climate accord, when 194 countries signed on the dotted line volunteering significant cuts to greenhouse gas emissions.

Another point of environmental pride for President Obama is his designation of 29 new national monuments protecting some 553 million acres of naturally and/or culturally significant land and waters. Key adds to the U.S. conservation docket under Obama include the 257 million offshore acres in the Pacific west of Hawaii, 1.8 million acres in the California desert, and most recently another 1.5 million acres across two desert tracts in Nevada and Utah.

Environmentalists were critical of Obama at the end of his first term for his lack of attention to conservation: The Obama White House at that point had protected far fewer acres than any of his four predecessors. George W. Bush set aside just under four million acres, Bill Clinton protected some 27 million, George H.W. Bush conserved almost 18 million, and Ronald Reagan protected 12.5 million. But Obama came on strong during his second term and now can boast protecting at least three times as much federal land and water from development as any previous president.

Barack Obama's environmental accomplishments include helping broker the Paris climate accord, pushing through the Clean Power Plan, and adding upwards of 500 million acres to America's conservation portfolio.

The Obama administration also made great strides on greasing the wheels of the clean energy transition by re-upping renewable energy financial incentives, rejecting the Keystone XL and DAPL pipeline projects, and establishing offshore drilling bans in the Arctic and Atlantic. But the $64,000 question remains: which of the environmental accomplishments of the last eight years will Donald Trump overturn. After all, Trump has stated his intent to overturn the Clean Power Plan, pull out of or ignore the Paris climate accord, gut the EPA, and open up significant amounts of federal land to oil and gas drilling. Only time will tell if Trump can tarnish Obama's otherwise shining environmental track record.

Church Vandalized from A6

One person that Father Robert wants to hear from is Donald Trump. He said:

We are asking for Donald Trump, if he wants to be the president for all Americans as he said the day after the election, to come out from hiding behind his white constituency and stand with people like the ones here at my church, to stand among immigrants and say: 'Stop the hatred, the bigotry and the racism that's infecting our country.'

The Nation contacted the RNC and Trump headquarters for comment. The RNC referred us to an email address to contact the Trump transition team. Our emails bounced back. Calls have not been returned. Their conscious obliviousness to this and so many other similar hate crimes across the country—done in Donald Trump's name—cannot stand.

As Gustavo Andrade, the Executive Director of Mía, the Movement of Immigrants in America, said to me:

One of the foulest and most immediate consequences of Donald Trump's behavior during this election cycle has been to embolden individuals who seek to inflict pain and commit acts of violence against our community. We must all fight back against hate wherever it may show up, and take steps to support the more vulnerable among us. That's what loving freedom truly means.

This needs to happen. Father Robert told me about a seven-year-old boy from Nigeria who approached him after the sermon and asked, "Is this the way it's going to be now?"

We the people—much more than any words from Donald Trump—will play the decisive role in answering that question. Or as Father Robert said to the child, "It doesn't have to be."

PLEDGE TO GO GREEN IN 2017

Tired of making the same old resolutions, try a different approach and pledge to go green in 2017:

- ▶ Resolve to reduce, reuse, recycle and repurpose more this year;
- ▶ Never purchase bottled water;
- ▶ Remember your reusable bag;
- ▶ Walk or bike to work;
- ▶ Resolve to waste less energy in your home;
- ▶ Switch to green power and consider solar; and
- ▶ Commit to eating local, organic, seasonal food.

Prince George's County Department of the Environment, Planning and Office of Capital Services provides recycling and sustainability in our everyday lives. ENVIRONMENTAL
