Grantmaking Study Reveals Funding Gaps in Opportunity Cardin Calls for a Re-evaluation of the Process

By PRESS OFFICER
Sen. Benjamin Cardin's Office

Washington, DC — Responding to the results of a National Institutes of Health-commissioned study published in this week's Science journal, U.S. Senator Ben Cardin (D-MD) called for a re-evaluation of NIH's grantmaking process that may be biased against African-American scientists applying for grants. According to the report, "black Ph.D. scientists—and not other minorities—were far less likely to receive NIH funding than a white scientist from a similar institution with the same

President Barack Obama leads a briefing on the current situation in Libya with National Security Advisor Tom Donilon, foreground, and Chief of Staff Bill Daley.

Statement By The President on Libya

THE PRESIDENT: Good afternoon, everybody. I just completed a call with my National Security Council on the situation in Libya. And earlier today I spoke to Prime Minister Cameron about the extraordinary events taking place there.

The situation is still very fluid. There remains a degree of uncertainty and there are still regime elements who pose a threat. But this much is clear: The Qaddafi regime is coming to an end, and the future of Libya is in the hands of its people.

In just six months, the 42-year reign of Muammar Qaddafi has unraveled. Earlier this year, we were inspired by the peaceful protests that broke out across Libya. This basic and joyful longing for human freedom echoed the voices that we had heard all across the region, from Tunis to Cairo. In the face of these protests, the Qaddafi regime responded with brutal crackdowns. Civilians were murdered in the streets. A campaign of violence was launched against the Libyan people. Qaddafi threatened to hunt peaceful protestors down like rats. As his forces advanced across the country, there existed the potential for wholesale massacres of innocent civilians.

In the face of this aggression, the international community took action. The United States helped shape a U.N. Security Council resolution that mandated the protection of Libyan civilians. An unprecedented coalition was formed that included the United States, our NATO partners and Arab nations. And in March, the

Tremors Raise Concerns About Preparedness of Evacuation Routes

There are 25 Primary Evacuation Routes Out Of The Nation's Capital

WASHINGTON, D. C. (August, 2011) – The magnitude 5.8 earthquake that forced the evacuation of the U.S. Capitol Building and the Pentagon and shuttled memorials and monuments, also sent local workers scrambling into the streets as the floor beneath them shook. It also rattled nerves up and down the East Coast and raised questions about emergency evacuation plans and tested the area's emergency transportation operations plans, said AAA Mid-Atlantic.

The large-scale quake event, and the prospect of aftershocks and other "earthquakes in divers places," are also raising concerns about our preparedness for catastrophic and cataclysmic events since September 11, 2001. Although the region was spared major damage and loss of life, the intensity of the tremors had an outsized impact on the telecommunications and transportation infrastructure for 12 million persons living in the region from the quake's epicenter to the outskirts of the Washington Metro area.

"It was perhaps the biggest scramble home at rush hour on the area's roadways since the 9/11 terrorist attack on the Pentagon," said John B. Townsend II, AAA Mid-Atlantic's Manager of Public and Government Affairs. "It is absolute gridlock out there, and traffic flow is virtually nonexistent. This was a test case for what to do in a large-scale emergency. And commuters failed it and the transportation infrastructure system failed them."

Everything and everyone moved at a snail's pace. In the aftermath, area roads resembled extended parking lots. Traffic jams and gridlock were de rigueur. Amtrak train service along the Northeast Corridor between Baltimore and Washington, D.C. operated at reduced speeds. The Metro system was jammed with passengers and that system was reduced to a crawl, as metro

Office of the Governor

SALISBURY, MD (August, 2011) - Governor Martin O'Malley and Delaware Governor Jack Markell launched an important new effort by both states to collaborate and share information across jurisdictional boundaries about violent or potentially violent offenders. Details of the new initiative were announced at a meeting today on the campus of Salisbury University.

"In our continued effort to make Maryland a national leader in public safety and homeland security preparedness, we support effective communication and information sharing across all levels of government and state borders," said Governor O'Malley. "The most important responsibilities we have in government are to create jobs and protect the public's safety. Working together with our partners across the State, we have driven violent crime and property crime rates down to their lowest levels in recorded history. By reaching beyond our borders, using innovative technology and sharing information, we will continue to drive the levels down even further."

"Criminals and crime have no boundaries," said Delaware Governor Jack Markell. "It's our responsibility to work together

Movie Review

T"FRIGHT NIGHT"
Rated R for a lot of harsh profanity, a fair amount of blood and gore, some sexuality.

For a film with such a campy title -- and for a film about a suburban vampire -- "Fright Night" is awfully cool.

In and Around Morningside-Skyline

by Mary McHale 301 735 3451

Two local establishments return to their roots

Dee's Famous Cuts is opening in the Skyline shopping center, in the shop that in recent years has been a tax office and a clothing store.

Back about 1960, it opened as Skyline Hair Stylists. It had been built by my neighbor, Earl Gaddis, for his wife Anne who had been doing hair in her home. An ad in the 1963 Morningside Directory offers "Hair styling to fit your personality, Expert hair coloring, Permanent waving." After the Gaddis family moved away, the beauty shop continued under several different owners and names.

In Clinton, the Sears store has become a Kmart, which it was originally. I checked it out and found lots of Red Tag sales and shelves still being stocked. I'm glad to have Kmart back.

7-Eleven hit
The 7-Eleven on Auth Road had an unwelcome customer last week—a truck that crashed through the front doors. It struck the checkout counter, doing damage that can still be seen. Fortunately no one was injured. New doors have been installed and a front window is boarded up. The driver was charged.

Neighbors
Bonnie Kamenicky, Mary Langley and Janice Diggs were commended in The Morningside Sun for their efforts in repealing the proposed extension of Ames Street in Morningside through to Rena Road and the new Andrews Federal Campus Project, under development on Forestville Road. Along with Councilman Kevin Kline and Councilwoman Sheila Scott, the women acquired about 100 signatures in opposition.

In September I usually go on a weekend retreat. Loyola on the Potomac, a Jesuit Retreat House in Faulkner, is offering such a retreat for men and woman, Sept. 9-11. For information, call 301-392-0819 or 301-392-0801.

Hazel Loughmiller, long-time resident and life member of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Morningside Volunteer Fire Department, died August 16. I'll pay tribute to her in next week's column.

Free Movie Nights

Bring the family, a picnic basket, lawn chairs or blanket to Darnall's Chance House Museum in Upper Marlboro to see "The Princess and the Frog" on Sept. 10, and "National Treasure" on Sept. 24, both at 9 p.m. No reservation necessary. Info: 301-952-8010.

Executive Rushern L. Baker, III Welcomes Students, Teachers, Principals and Parents Back to School

Upper Marlboro, Maryland – Prince George's County Executive Rushern L. Baker, III welcomed students, teachers, and principals back to school for the beginning of the 2011-2012 school year. County Executive Baker visited Phyllis E. Williams Elementary School in Largo, Patuxent Elementary School in Upper Marlboro, Parkdale High School in Riverdale, Suitland High School in Suitland, and Gladys Noon Spellman Elementary School in Cheverly.

County Executive Baker joined Lt. Governor Anthony G. Brown and Prince George's County Public Schools (PGCPS) Superintendent William R. Hite, Jr. at Parkdale High School where students demonstrated their new student-managed bank to the officials. The County Executive also greeted parents, talked to teachers and principals, helped deliver the morning announcements at Patuxent Elementary School and sat in on classes, including his daughter's calculus class, at Suitland High School.

"I am full of optimism and confidence that the 2011-2012 will be a great school year for our public school system," said Baker. "Continually and consistently improving education in Prince George's County is the top priority of my administration. In order to give our children the greatest opportunities and grow the next generation of Prince Georgians to achieve their goals and create a prosperous future, we must do everything in our power to provide them the tools they need to succeed."

Throughout the first day of school visits, the County Executive previewed and highlighted some of his upcoming education initiatives:

- Communicating the importance of students attending school and arriving to school on time;
- Continuing his "school per week" visits begun last December upon taking office;
- Promoting healthier habits and participating in physical exercises with the students;
- Constantly advocating and seeking more resources for students; and
- Focusing on teacher training and retention, in collaboration with the Superintendent and Board of Education.

"We have thousands of hard-working principals, teachers, and students in our school system," said Baker. "I thank them for their dedication and wish them great success in the new school year. As County Executive, and as a proud parent of a PGCPS student, I am committed to making this the smartest, safest, and best school year to date."

Congressional Update

Statements of Prince George's County Executive Baker and Congresswoman Edwards on General Service Administration Award for U.S. Department of Health and Human Services

Upper Marlboro, Maryland – The following is a statement from Prince George's County Executive Rushern L. Baker, III on the decision by the General Service Administration (GSA) to award a $450 million dollar lease for federal office space for the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to Montgomery County:

"The headline in this morning's Washington Post read 'Prince George's Again Fails to Attract.' That headline has been written too many times when it comes to federal office leasing space. 25% of the region's federal workforce lives in Prince George's County, but the County has under 4.0% of the federal office leasing space in the region. The private sector has begun to discover and invest in Prince George's County at developments like National Harbor, the EYA Arts District in Hyattsville, and Konterra. It is important for the federal government to make a similar investment in our residents.

To create jobs, reduce traffic, and spur commercial development that will increase revenues for education and public safety, it is critical for Prince George's County to compete equally and succeed in obtaining future GSA bids. I hope that we will have passed our proposed $50 million dollar Economic Development Incentive (EDI) Fund before the next federal office space process starts so we will have more tools and incentives to win the lease and create jobs in Prince George's County.

Prince George's County enjoys incredible geography with its proximity to the capitol, dedicated and educated workforce, and available transit oriented development space around our Metro station. I am committed to ensuring that Prince George's County we will aggressively compete for the next federal office leasing space opportunity."

Congresswoman Donna F. Edwards released the following statement:

"I have spent the three years I have been in office trying to understand leasing disparities in the metropolitan region. Today is no exception. Prince George's County and our businesses are ready and open for economic development around our 15 metro stations when GSA decides to have a fair, open, and transparent process that balances competitively leasing opportunities in the metropolitan region. We will remain vigilant as opportunities avail themselves.

WHAT'S HAPPENING? Down on the Boardwalk

by Karen Jensen Miles

The final walkthrough inspection for the new and much improved Piscataway Park boardwalk was conducted on July 30th. The wait is finally over and we can again enjoy the beauty of Accokeek Creek and its marsh and swamp wetlands. It will also be possible to head up to Mockley Point via the newly restored living shoreline.

The original boardwalk was built by the National Park Service (NPS) in 1985 and became a very important component of AFF's on-site education programs. Hundreds of thousands of students, teachers and parents have since observed the river; the forest and wetlands with their fauna and flora; felt the exhilarating breezes; the baking sun; or the biting cold. In other words, they experienced the wonder and excitement of the out-of-doors.

The ravages of time and the elements had rendered the boardwalk crooked, rotting and dangerous in places. For several years, NPS attempted to secure funding to build a new one and finally was given the go-ahead late last year. For the new boardwalk it was required to hand-dig the pilings and that all work was kept within a very tight footprint. The workers of Garcete Construction were successful in doing so and did a wonderful job.

I think you will agree that the wait was well worth it. Saunter on down and take your time – there are lovely new benches along the way for whiling away the afternoon. Use the ramp that leads to the beach along the living shoreline. Watch the tide flow in and out of the creek and the tidal gut on the northern end of the walkway. Enjoy!

LIBYA from A1

international community launched a military operation to save lives and stop Qaddafi's forces in their tracks.

In the early days of this intervention the United States provided the bulk of the firepower, and then our friends and allies stepped forward. The Transitional National Council established itself as a credible representative of the Libyan people. And the United States, together with our European allies and friends across the region, recognized the TNC as the legitimate governing authority in Libya.

Qaddafi was cut off from arms and cash, and his forces were steadily degraded. From Benghazi to Misrata to the western mountains, the Libyan opposition courageously confronted the regime, and the tide turned in their favor.

Over the last several days, the situation in Libya has reached a tipping point as the opposition increased its coordination from east to west, took town after town, and the people of Tripoli rose up to claim their freedom.

For over four decades, the Libyan people have lived under the rule of a tyrant who denied them their most basic human rights. Now, the celebrations that we've seen in the streets of Libya shows that the pursuit of human dignity is far stronger than any dictator. I want to emphasize that this is not over yet. As the regime collapses, there is still fierce fighting in some areas, and we have reports of regime elements threatening to continue fighting.

Although it's clear that Qaddafi's rule is over, he still has the opportunity to reduce further bloodshed by explicitly relinquishing power to the people of Libya and calling for those forces that continue to fight to lay down their arms for the sake of Libya.

As we move forward from this pivotal phase, the opposition should continue to take important steps to bring about a transition that is peaceful, inclusive and just. As the leadership of the TNC has made clear, the rights of all Libyans must be respected. True justice will not come from reprisals and violence; it will come from reconciliation and a Libya that allows its citizens to determine their own destiny.

In that effort, the United States will be a friend and a partner. We will join with allies and partners to continue the work of safeguarding the people of Libya. As remaining regime elements menace parts of the country, I've directed my team to be in close contact with NATO as well as the United Nations to determine other steps that we can take. To deal with the humanitarian impact, we're working to ensure that critical supplies reach those in need, particularly those who have been wounded.

Secretary Clinton spoke today with her counterparts from leading nations of the coalition on all these matters. And I've directed Ambassador Susan Rice to request that the U.N. Secretary General use next month's general assembly to support this important transition.

For many months, the TNC has been working with the international community to prepare for a post-Qaddafi Libya. As those efforts proceed, our diplomats will work with the TNC as they ensure that the institutions of the Libyan state are protected, and we will support them with the assets of the Qaddafi regime that were frozen earlier this year. Above all, we will call for an inclusive transition that leads to a democratic Libya.

As we move forward, we should also recognize the extraordinary work that has already been done. To the American people, these events have particular resonance. Qaddafi's regime has murdered scores of American citizens in acts of terror in the past. Today we remember the lives of those who were taken in those acts of terror and stand in solidarity with their families. We also pay tribute to Admiral Sam Locklear and all of the men and women in uniform who have saved so many lives over the last several months, including our brave pilots that have executed their mission with skill and extraordinary bravery. And all of this was done without putting a single U.S. troop on the ground.

To our friends and allies, the Libyan intervention demonstrates what the international community can achieve when we stand together as one -- although the efforts in Libya are not yet over. NATO has once more proven that it is the most capable alliance in the world and that its strength comes from both its firepower and the power of our democratic ideals. And the Arab members of our coalition have stepped up and shown what can be achieved when we act together as equal partners. Their actions send a powerful message about the unity of our effort and our support for the future of Libya.

Finally, the Libyan people: Your courage and character have been unbreakable in the face of a tyrant. An ocean divides us, but we are joined in the basic human longing for freedom, for justice and for dignity. Your revolution is your own, and your sacrifices have been extraordinary. Now, the Libya that you deserve is within your reach. Going forward, we will stay in close coordination with the TNC to support that outcome. And though there will be huge challenges ahead, the extraordinary events in Libya remind us that fear can give way to hope and that the power of people striving for freedom can bring about a brighter day.

Thank you very much.
