Centers Integral to Success of Healthcare

By PRESS OFFICER Senator Cardin's Office

Maryland has been on the leading edge of implementing the benefits and consumer-protections of the Affordable Care Act

Baltimore – Celebrating National Health Center Week, U.S. Senator Ben Cardin (D-MD) visited the Baltimore Medical System's Highlandtown Healthy Living Center to tour the facility and discuss how implementation of the Affordable Care Act (ACA) will double the capacity and use of Federally Qualified Health Centers (FQHC) in Maryland and nationwide. As millions more Americans gain access to quality health coverage thanks to the Affordable Care Act, federally qualified health centers will provide essential primary and additional services in our communities.

"The Affordable Care Act is already providing stable and secure coverage for Maryland families and slowing the growth of health care costs to provide Americans with better value, better options, and better

Ringing the Back-to-School Bell:

800,000 Students in Area Beginning the School Year

"School's Open – Drive Carefully" Is More Than A Slogan, It Saves Lives

WASHINGTON, D. C. (August, 2013) - Nearly 800,000 children across the Greater Washington area are heading back to the little school house, crowding buses and bus stops, gingerly negotiating busy streets, and walking about bustling sidewalks without a care in the world. It all starts in earnest next Monday. Well, the average school house in the metro area isn't so little anymore. As proof, nearly 124,000 students in Prince George's County will become the first students in the area to hear the ringing of the school bell for the 2013-2014 academic year.

In Prince George's County an army of burly school bus drivers will ferry nearly sixout-of- ten students (80,000 pupils or 64.5 percent) aboard an armada of 1,250 school buses each day. It signals the return of thousands of kids with all their first-day nerves, tears, squeals and cacophony. So also keep your eyes peeled for them and for all those school safety patrols, bikes, yellow school buses, and a veritable legion of welltrained, eagle-eyed crossing guards on area roadways in local school zones.

So, it's high time for area motorists to mind their safety Ps and Qs and to get back into the habit of watching for children on their way to and from school, of slowing down in school zones and residential neighborhoods, and by stopping for school buses loading and unloading children which is "the most dangerous part of the school bus ride."

"A new school year is dawning and it's an exciting time for children. Soon more than three- and-a-quarter million area children will begin their daily commutes to school by car, bus, bike or foot. In their excitement, they can quickly dart out between parked cars, around school

Providers Asked to Help Facilitate Exchanges

Maryland is on the Leading Edge of Implementing the Affordable Care Act

By PRESS OFFICER Senator Cardin's Office

Cheverly, MD – U.S. Senator Ben Cardin (D-MD) continued his outreach to Maryland's healthcare providers in advance of the initial enrollment for Maryland's health new exchanges with a visit to Prince George's County Hospital and Center Dimensions Healthcare. Healthcare exchanges that begin in January 2014 are a centerpiece of the Affordable Care Participants in the roundtable will be on the front lines of navigating the Maryland exchange in the individual market and will be dealing mainly with those currently uninsured or underin-sured. "The Affordable Care Act is already providing stable and secure coverage for Maryland families and slowing the growth of health care costs to provide Americans with better value, better options, and better health. This new law is here to stay and we should be working together to build on the progress we've made through the law," said Senator Cardin. Water-Damaged Vehicles from Hurricane Sandy Showing Up

By PRESS OFFICER AAA

Tips For Spotting Flooded Or Water-Damaged Vehicles 9 Months After Superstorm

WASHINGTON, D. C. (August, 2013) – Sooner or later, they were bound to show up. They always do. Hurricane Sandy, which wreaked havoc on the northeast late last October, left hundreds of thousands of vehicles submerged in flood waters and salt water to varying degrees. Now nine months later, Sandy is delivering up seawater-damaged cars for sale on used car lots and by private sellers. What might seem like a bargain too good to be true on a used car might become a nightmarish ordeal, resulting in extensive damage and expensive repairs, warns

AAA Mid-Atlantic. More than 212,000 cars that were branded as "flood damage" by a state Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) are back on the road today across the United States, estimates CARFAX, which is headquartered in nearby Centreville, Virginia. In light of this, AAA Insurance is warning car buyers that flood-damaged vehicles can be shipped anywhere for resale, including in our own back yards. It already is. The vast majority of those Sandy-damaged cars - nearly two-thirds are showing up in Virginia and nine other states, including two states in the direct path of the storm's eyewall: New Jersey and New York, as expected. They're cropping up in Pennsylvania and Florida too. They are also rearing their ugly heads in far-flung places like Texas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Illinois, and Mississippi.

"Nine months in the making, these flood-damaged vehicles with checkered histories and 'scrubbed titles' are finally showing up for sale. Plus, they'll continue to 'flood' the marketplace for even up to a year after Sandy's seawaters have receded," said John B. Townsend II, AAA Mid-Atlantic's Manager of Public and Government Affairs. "Yet, an easy-to-fleece buyer doesn't know that 'title washing' has occurred. It's Caveat Emptor. Consumers in the market for a car should do their homework and check out any used car's Vehicle Identification Number (VIN) prior to any purchase."

So, why are so many of

Changing landscape

The Grahams have sold The Washington Post to Amazon-founder Jeff Bezos. I hope he doesn't change all the things I love about the paper, which I've read faithfully since 1958.

The Baden Naylor Road Bridge was due to re-open to vehicular traffic on July 9. It had been closed due to storm damage caused by Hurricane Lee. To alleviate potential flooding in the future, the new bridge was raised from the previous bridge height.

The Branch Avenue Metro Station is projected to have improved access thanks to Maryland's additional tax revenue. Fifty million of it will be used to improve access, including a pedestrian bridge. And $150 million will go towards a new interchange at Maryland Route 4 and Suitland Parkway.

Strayer University has submitted an application to build an $80 million classroom building on Auth Way, near the Branch Avenue Metro station.

Prince George's and Charles counties launched a new public transit service on July 1, linking Charles County's VanGO with Prince George's TheBus. The extended service allows transit users to travel between Brandywine Crossing and Pinefield South shopping centers. For information on VanGO, call 301-934-9305 or visit www.GO-VANGO.com. For TheBus information, call 301-324-BUSS.

Ross Dress for Less, in Oxon Hill, is hosting its grand opening.

May they rest in peace

Charles Daniel "Chuck" Yanchulis, 45, a 1986 graduate of Bishop McNamara High School, died May 30 after a long illness, at his home in St. Inigoes. He grew up in Clinton and earned a degree in computer science from the University of Scranton. He loved backpacking and sports—participating or watching. Survivors include his wife Lisa Anne; children, Elizabeth, Charlotte and Peter; mother, Juanita Yanchulis; brothers, Phil, Mick and Jon. Only last January 6, Chuck's father, Charles Phillip "Phil" Yanchulis, 72, of Fredericksburg, died. Phil was a supervisor for the U.S. Postal Service and I remember when he was manager at the Suitland Post Office. The Yanchulis family has had a very sad year!

Terrell Valante Edelen, 17, an honor student at Bishop McNamara High School, died suddenly on June 5. He was the son of Mary Ratiff and Charlie Edelen, grandson of Joyce and James Ratiff and Charles and the late Hattie Edelen. Mass of Christian Burial was at St. Philip's with burial at Resurrection Cemetery.

Donald Pray, 45, was struck and killed near Suitland Road and Suitland Parkway, about 1 a.m. August 5. According to The Washington Post, he had been drinking, had an argument with a passenger in his car, stopped the car, got out and lay down in the road. The accident is under investigation.

Maryland Hunger Solutions Applauds Maryland's Democratic U.S. House Members for Protecting SNAP

The following statement is attributable to Michael J. Wilson, Director, Maryland Hunger Solutions:

Maryland Hunger Solutions applauds the Maryland Democratic Members of the U.S. House of Representatives for joining every Democratic Member of the House of Representatives in yesterday's action to protect struggling American families and stand against SNAP cuts in the Farm Bill that would increase hunger in Maryland and across the country. As their letter (pdf) says, "The Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) is our country's most critical anti-hunger program. Nearly half of SNAP enrollees are children, and the program helps feed roughly one in three children in America. Additionally, almost 75 percent of SNAP participants are in households with children, seniors, or a disabled individ-

If SNAP is weakened, our state will not only see increased hunger, but also worse health and educational outcomes, and higher health costs - especially among our children. It is time for the House majority – starting with Maryland's Representative Andy Harris to step back in line with the values of the American people, do what is best for the people of Maryland, and vote for a Farm Bill that protects and strengthens SNAP.

Mary's Center receives $720,000 in Local and Federal Grants to Help with Health Benefits Exchange's Open Enrollment

Navigators, In-Person Assisters and Enrollment Assistance Workers will navigate DC and Maryland residents through the new health plan options.

Washington, DC – With the recent announcement from the DC Health Benefit Exchange Authority of Mary's Center being selected as one of the 35 DC-based groups to receive funding for the upcoming Open Enrollment in health coverage, the Center totaled $720,000 in local and federal grants to support this endeavor.

"This is great news to Mary's Center," says Maria Gomez, President and CEO. "For 25 years, we've supported uninsured individuals and families in finding much needed health options, and this funding will help us expand our efforts to ensure access to healthcare and reduce current health disparities."

As a Federally Qualified Health Center, Mary's Center received over $170,000 from the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) to hire three Enrollment Assistance Workers to do outreach and enrolment into Medicaid, CHIP, and other qualified health plans. For the same purpose, the Maryland Health Benefit Exchange awarded the Center with nearly $250,000 for three Navigators and two Assisters, and the DC Health Benefit Exchange Authority granted $300,000 for four In-Person Assisters.

During the upcoming days, Mary's Center staff who have been hired to navigate DC and Maryland residents through the health care exchanges, will be receiving training and then will begin reaching out to the uninsured community, including those hard-to-reach population groups, to walk them through the hundreds of health plans that will be available under the Affordable Care Act effective January 1, 2014.

MARY'S CENTER—

founded in 1988, is a Federally Oualified Health Center that provides health care, family literacy and social services to more than 30,000 individuals whose needs too often go unmet by the public and private healthcare systems. Mary's Center uses a holistic, multipronged approach to help each participant access individualized services that set them on the path toward good health, stable families, and economic independence. The Center offers high-quality, professional care in a safe and trusting environment to residents from the entire DC metropolitan region, including individuals from over 110 countries.

Should You Become Executor of Someone's Estate?

One of the most important decisions you'll make when writing your will is determining who should be named executor of your estate. Even if you're just leaving behind household goods and a small savings account, someone whether appointed by you or the state court - must settle your affairs.

Some people consider it an honor – or duty – to take responsibility for ensuring that their loved one's final wishes are carried out. But serving as an executor can be onerous and time-consuming, even for those with a strong financial or legal background. In a worst-case scenario, executors who act imprudently or in violation of their duties can be sued by beneficiaries and creditors.

Plus, you'll likely have to deal with the dreaded probate, a court-supervised process of locating and determining the value of the deceased's assets, paying final bills and taxes, and distributing what's left to the heirs.

Before you agree to serve as an estate's executor, make sure you understand what will be required of you. Major responsibilities often include:

Manage paperwork on behalf of the estate, including the will, trusts, insurance policies, bank, investment and retirement account statements, birth and death certificates, marriage, prenuptial agreement or divorce papers, military service records, real estate deeds, tax records, etc.

If the estate is complicated or likely to be contentious, you may want to hire a lawyer and/or accountant to help navigate the maze of paperwork.

File a certified copy of the will with the local probate court, which will determine if probate is necessary.

If the probate court confirms you as executor, you'll be issued a document called "letters testamentary," which gives you legal authority to act on the estate's behalf, including opening a bank account in the name of the estate to pay outstanding debts (loans, utilities, medical bills, credit card balances, etc.)

Notify all interested parties of the death. These might include: government agencies (Social Security, Veterans Administration, Medicare, U.S. Post Office, DMV); financial institutions; creditors; current and former employers; retirement plan administrators; investment firms; insurance companies; doctors and other professionals; landlord or tenants; utilities,

You'll often need to send a copy of the death certificate to close out accounts, claim insurance benefits, change ownership of assets or accounts to the estate or a beneficiary, so order ample copies through the funeral home or county health depart-

Locate assets, including personal property, bank accounts and safe deposit box contents, and ensure that they are protected until sold or distributed to inheritors. This may involve updating home and car insurance, changing locks, overseeing appraisals of property that must be sold, etc.

Collect money owed to the estate, such as outstanding wages, insurance benefits, retirement plan benefits and rents. Notify heirs about their bequest.

File the deceased's final federal, state and local tax returns, as well as federal and state estate tax returns, if applicable. Once probate has closed, you will distribute the remaining assets to named beneficiaries. Because acting as an executor can be very time-consuming (often taking months or years), you are allowed to charge the estate a fee for your time – usually a percentage of the estate's value, as dictated by state law. In short, both parties should thoroughly understand what's required of an estate's executor to make sure it's a good fit. There's no shame in saying no if it's beyond your abilities, and plenty of professional help is available – and advisable – if you do need assistance.

They are hot to trot on used car lots, now that their titles have been washed. The floodgates have opened with damaged cars downstream, so let the gullible beware, warns AAA Insurance. "Title washing," a rather apropos term, is a ploy used by unscrupulous sellers to "erase" or conceal a flood-damaged vehicle's damage history from the potential buyer. In this scam, the seller moves a flooded, totaled or junked vehicle with a salvage title through several states, scrubbing the title along the

By the way, crooks use the same swindle on stolen vehicles. "If you have a sneaking suspicion the vehicle in question was flooded, or damaged by tropical cyclone Sandy, or stolen for that matter, or that its title has been cloned, simply check to see if the dashboard VIN plate has been tampered with," Townsend advised. "Then, have your trusted mechanic look for VIN markings elsewhere on the vehicle. What's more, unless you know what you are looking for, they are really hard to find. However, your mechanic knows and he will make sure all the VIN marked parts and places match."

Après Le Déluge (after the flood) - How to Spot a Flood-Damaged Vehicle Or A Cloned

Shopping for a used car? The trouble is, in the wake of Superstorm Sandy some private vehicle owners never got around to declaring their vehicles "salvage." AAA Insurance offers these tips:

Check the vehicle's VIN

with appropriate government agencies or your state bureau of motor vehicles.

Conduct a title search or the vehicle. Simply check the NICB's VINCheckSM service or obtain a CARFAX Vehicle History Report. These reports can potentially reveal if the vehicle has been involved in a flood, major accident, fire, or uncover odometer fraud, Analyze the ownership pattern for any new or late model vehicle with no lien holder.

Look for information from a the vehicle's brand history. "Brands" are descriptive labels regarding the status of a motor vehicle, such as "junk," "salvage," and "flood" vehicles.

Engage your sense of smell to detect any damp or musty odors inside the vehicle.

Are the windows fogged up? Has the carpet or upholstery been replaced or recently shampooed? Pull back the carpet at different areas and look for mud, dirt or signs of water stains.

Inspect the dashboard underside for signs of mud and dirt. This is a particularly hard area to clean.

Look under the vehicle for corrosion. It is uncommon to find corrosion in newer vehicles and those that are owned or sold in southern states.

Open all doors, hood, and trunk to inspect for corrosion, mud and dirt or discoloration on the door frames, hinges and under the weather stripping. Pay special attention to small spaces and crevices that are difficult to clean.

Check all warning lights, window motors, and all electrical components to ensure they are working properly. While a non-working part alone does not mean the vehicle was flooded, it combined with other difficulties is a cause for concern.

Always have the vehicle inspected by a quality repair facility prior to purchasing. AAA Approved Auto Repair facilities are located across the United States. Nearby locations found be AAA.com/Repair.

Benjamin L. Cardin

United States Senator for Maryland

Senator Cardin Talks Sequestration with DOD Employees at Fort Meade

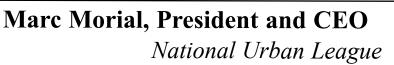

"We cannot continue to provide for the defense of our nation by maintaining such a harmful policy as sequestration toward our civilian workers."

Fort Meade, MD - U.S. Senator Ben Cardin was hosted at Fort George G. Meade Wednesday by the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE) Local 1923 for a town hall with civilian Department of Defense (DOD) employees to discuss sequestration and the federal budget. The group was a sampling of the more than 27,000 DOD civilian employees at Fort Meade, a majority of who have been facing furloughs brought on by sequestration cuts. Fort Meade, the nation's hub for information, intelligence and cybersecurity is Maryland's largest employer and the third largest Army post in the nation. The pay cut from furloughs has had ripple effects throughout the region.

"The hard working public servants who support our military deserve better than sequestration. I want our federal workers at DOD and across the government to know that what they do matters, is of paramount importance to our national security, and that we are fighting on their behalf on Capitol Hill. They make sacrifices every day, and in turn, Congress owes it to all of them to work together for a plan that addresses our budget deficit in a balanced and fair manner," said Senator Cardin. "Furloughs of any length are poor policy. They greatly disrupt our national and economic security and put civilians in financial hardship. We cannot continue to provide for the defense of our nation by maintaining such a harmful policy toward its civilian workers.

"Sequestration is bad for our country and bad for Maryland's economy," said John Gage, former National President of AFGE, and current Business Manager of AFGE Local 1923. "Congress must work to end sequestration now. The indiscriminate across-the-board furloughs have had a severe impact on hardworking civil servants, many of whom live paycheck to paycheck. I am glad Senator Cardin gave them the opportunity to voice their concerns and frustrations today."

"I commend Secretary Hagel for finding a way to reduce furlough days for DOD civilians from 11 to six. It's welcome news for DOD families and the communities that support our military installations. But losing six days pay is still not acceptable. Sequestration cuts and the resulting furloughs are hurting real people and real families, and hurting our national security by reducing readiness, cutting morale and distracting hardworking public servants from carrying out their vital missions. In addition, it is taking a toll on our regional and national economies. Our civilian defense workforce has showed great patience and patriotism in recent months. Congress owes them a sequester replacement before they are subjected to even deeper cuts in FY 14. It is irresponsible to let political dysfunction get in the way of ensuring for our national security and economic health," Senator Cardin said to audience gathered at Fort Meade. "We must restart negotiations on a comprehensive plan to replace all of sequestration and restore normal, regular - and in many circumstance – absolutely essential functions of our government."

50th Anniversary of the March on Washington

"The hour is late. The gap is widening. The rumbles of the drums of discontent resounding throughout this land are heard in all parts of the world."

Whitney M. Young, Jr., at the 1963

March on Washington

Fifty years ago, on August 28, 1963, more than 250,000 people gathered for the historic March on Washington to demand jobs and freedom. The March was organized by a coalition of civil rights, social justice and labor movement leaders known as the "Big Six" - James Farmer of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE); Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC); John Lewis, of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC); A. Philip Randolph of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; Roy Wilkins of the NAACP; and our own Whitney M. Young, Jr. as President of the National Urban League.

While that day is most remembered for Dr. King's landmark "I Have a Dream" speech, Whitney Young and a host of other speakers took the podium to call for the passage of long overdue civil rights legislation and to demand jobs, a living wage, decent housing and quality education for all. As America prepares to mark the anniversary of this watershed moment and in the same spirit of unity and collaboration that Whitney Young brought to the 1963 March, the National Urban League will again join with other leading civil rights organizations to mobilize citizens across the nation to gather in Washington, DC to continue to press for economic empowerment and justice.

While much progress has been made in the last 50 years, in re-reading Whitney Young's insightful 1963 speech, I was disappointed by the fact that many of the problems he so passionately challenged us to face back then, continue to plague us today -- growing income inequality, high unemployment, urban and rural poverty, separate and unequal schools, health and criminal justice disparities, even race-based barriers to the right to vote. That is why this is not simply a time of commemoration, but more importantly, a time of continuation. The National Urban League was there in 1963, and we are still there in 2013. We are still determined to continue America's unfinished march to freedom and to bring jobs, dignity, economic empowerment and justice to communities most in need.

A comprehensive schedule of activities, looking back and looking forward, has been planned by the National Urban League, Rev. Al Sharpton of the National Action Network, Benjamin Jealous of the NAACP, Melanie Campbell of the National Coalition on Black Civic Participation and others leading up to the August 24th 50th Anniversary March on Washington at the Lincoln Memorial. Most notably, together with the Memorial Foundation led by Harry E. Johnson, we are hosting the Drum Majors for Justice Celebration on August 23, followed by an Urban League pre-March rally on August 24.

Our activities will kick-off on August 23 at 8:30am with a "Redeem the Dream Summit" at the Washington Grand Hyatt Hotel, featuring civil rights legends, contemporary leaders and members of the public in dialogues about the legacy of the March on Washington in the new era of civil rights and how to chart the way forward. A "Drum Majors for Justice Future Leaders Celebration" will follow from 2-4 pm at Washington's Freedom Plaza. On August 24th, Urban League leaders and supporters will gather at the Grand Hyatt at 5:30am for a brief program and rally before parading together to the Lincoln Memorial for the 50th Anniversary March on Washington.

We urge you to join us for this historic weekend of commemoration and continuation. As Whitney Young reminded us 50 years ago, "We must support the strong. We must give courage to the timid. We must remind the indifferent, and we must warn the opposed. Civil rights which are God given and constitutionally guaranteed are not

Invisible Children

"I would say that, well, obviously my high school didn't prepare me for college."

--Darryl Briggs, youth leader and college student

The third of five boys born in the Bronx to a single mother who dropped out of high school, Darryl Briggs was starting out with at least two strikes against him. Growing up poor, he got to high school he already felt completely ignored, almost invisible. Darryl's high-poverty high school was eight floors overflowing with 8,000 students and an obvious lack of resources: "There were easily 35 students to a classroom and there weren't even 35 desks in the classroom for the 35 students to sit in . . . there was one lab in the entire school." The physical conditions discouraged learning, but for Darryl, the worst part was the lack of one-on-one attention. His classes were uninteresting and way too easy. None of the teachers noticed his potential and need for academic challenges, or even noticed him at all. When he skipped class, no one asked why. When he started hanging out with the "wrong crowd," no one told him that wasn't a good

When he was 15 Darryl ran away from home and got arrested and sentenced to two months in juvenile detention centers. When he tried to go back to high school, school officials said without guidance and support he couldn't come back. They suggested he get a G.E.D. Soon he was arrested again. The turning point for Darryl was getting involved as a community organizer, finding a mentor, and going through leadership training programs.

A friend introduced him to a community organizing group where Darryl met the person he now calls his lifetime mentor and found his calling making a positive difference for other young people. He became a youth program coordinator for Better Bronx, focused on combating youth and environment disparities in the South Bronx, and discovered he wanted to get his G.E.D. and continue his education. Darryl recently graduated from Bronx Community College and is pursuing a bachelor's degree in social work at Lehman College. He chose social work because it offers an opportunity for him to Black, and bright in the Bronx continue making the one-onwithout guidance, by the time one connections he missed so able to connect with and serve national trainer for the Children's Defense Fund (CDF)'s Young Advocate Leadership Training (YALT) program, Darryl was a panelist at the Educational Testing Service-CDF's June symposium in a session on "Lived Experience" which helped participants understand the struggles young Black males face and supports they need in the high school years. Darryl's ideas about what works come partly from his personal experience with what didn't work in the all-too-common schools like the one he dropped out of.

Darryl feels strongly that a nonprofit organization, For a one caring adult can make all the difference. "That's what I was lacking as far as my high school experience and as far as my adolescence. I didn't have really anyone to guide me and say, hey, D, maybe you could take this route instead of this route, maybe you could make this decision instead of that decision, or maybe I could hold your hand while you do this instead of doing that."

> Darryl appreciates that he's as an example for the young people he works with because they know he comes from the same place they do. But even when teachers don't automatically have that connection with their students, Darryl stressed the importance of teachers knowing something about the community their students come from and making the effort to establish some connections: "A sense of cultural competence needs to play a role. We have many teachers that come from backgrounds." different Something as simple as giving

County Supplier Diversity Division Accepts Online Applications for County-based Certifications

LARGO, MD -The Prince George's County Supplier Development & Diversity Division (SDDD) announces that a new online application process to be certified with the County as a local, small, minority, and/or disadvantage business is now available.

"With the large amount of opportunities that are coming to Prince George's County, it is imperative for the County to be able to accept online applications for County-based certifications," said Roland L. Jones, Executive Director of the Prince George's County Supplier Development & Diversity Division. "This new technology will help to streamline the certification process and enable companies to be certified more efficiently."

The County-based Certification process can take up to 90 days upon receipt of the online application. Companies who want to be certified with Prince George's County as a Countybased firm can apply online at www.princegeorgescountymd.gov/sddd.

Under the Jobs First Act, SDDD began certifying companies as County-based firms January 1, 2013. The new bidding preferences and participation requirements for certified local, small, minority, disadvantaged, veteran and service disabled veteranowned businesses went into effect July 1 of this year.

Supplier Diversity Deputy Sharon Jackson Named One of 25 Influential Women In Business-Making a Difference

LARGO, MD - Prince George's County Supplier Development & Diversity Division (SDDD) Deputy Executive Director Sharon Moore Jackson was selected as one of the "25 Influential Women In Business-Making a Difference" by Magazine.

"I am honored to support Sharon Jackson. She has a proven track record and is a seasoned and respected professional in Supplier Diversity in the State of Maryland and within our great County," said Roland Jones, Executive Director, Prince George's County Supplier Development & Diversity Division. "A true advocate for small and minority businesses, she has already received numerous awards and citations for her commitment and dedicated service and is always ready to serve."

Jackson will be recognized in the company of other distinguished and accomplished women from around the world at MEA Magazine's 12th annual awards luncheon, "25 Influential Women Business-Making Difference" on Wednesday, October 2, 2013 from 11:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. The luncheon, with the theme: "Leading the Way," at the Mayflower Hotel, located at 1127 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. 20036.

With an expected 350 to be in attendance, the luncheon will provide an opportunity to network with local, national and regional government officials and corporate executives; international and Fortune 500 business owners; members of the media and political and community leaders. Industry representation will include manufacturing, import/export companies, IT, cyber security, healthcare, telecommunications, construction, finance and investments, and educa-health. We should be working together to build on the progress we've made through the law," said Senator Cardin. "Community health centers are the backbone to providing quality health care for almost 300,000 Marylanders today. The ACA's direct investment in health centers and in the primary care workforce, payment protections for health centers, and other key policy changes, are providing a necessary support to community health centers as they grow to serve millions of new patients in thousands of new communities nationwide.

"Highlandtown and federally qualified health centers like it are leading the way in developing model systems that overcome geographic, cultural, linguistic, and other barriers through a team based approach to care, including physicians, nurses, dental providers, social workers, and many others. In particular, they emphasize coordinated primary and preventive services that promote reductions in health disparities for low-income individuals, racial and ethnic minorities, rural communities and other underserved populations. From a pricare perspective, Baltimore Medical System has become the premier provider to the rapidly growing Latino community in Baltimore. I applaud their commitment to addressing the unmet health needs of Spanish-speaking immigrants, including childhood immunizations, basic health education about well child care, early entry into prenatal care, access to oral health services for children, and well child care."

"The importance of the ACA as a game changer for the communities we assist and the uninsured and underinsured patients we serve should not be minimized. It is a driver of change that only access to quality health care can bring to the quality of life, learning and livelihood, where too often poverty and its associated health disparities has defined the opportunities and lowered the bar on expectations for many individuals," said Jay Wolvovsky, President and CEO, Baltimore Medical System.

The Affordable Care Act been crucial for America's community health centers. The law provides $11 billion in funding over five years to build new health care centers and expand existing ones, effectively doubling their capacity to more than 40 million patients by 2015. By that date, it is estimated that community health care centers will provide affordable health care to two-thirds of lowincome Americans.

Earlier this year, Senator Cardin joined Secretary of Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius to announce new funds to help more uninsured Marylanders enroll in affordable health insurance coverage made available by the Affordable Care Act. In Maryland an estimated $1.7 million being made available to support 16 federally qualified community health centers (FQHCs) and expand their ability to hire staff and enroll people in affordable health plans.

Baltimore Medical System (BMS) is Maryland's largest Federally Qualified Health Center serving more uninsured patients than any other community health center in the State. BMS serves over 46,000 patients annually providing both primary care and support services through six community health centers and eight schoolbased health sites. These services increase a patients access to care and include same day appointments, sliding fee scale, health benefit advisors, home visiting and medical interpretation. The Highlandtown Healthy Living Center is Baltimore Medical System's largest community health center, serving over 16,000 patients and more than 57,600 visits in 2012.

able to shop for insurance options through the marketplace. Those Americans will benefit from strong competition among insurance providers. enrolling these Americans in health coverage won't happen overnight. Unfortunately, not all states are as proactive as Maryland. Some states have been fighting the exchanges, but the federal government will step in and set them up.

"I am proud that Maryland's hospitals, healthcare providers and health systems have been on the leading edge of implementing the benefits and consumerprotections of the Affordable Care Act. As we move closer to the initial enrollment period, we are learning that rates in Maryland are among the lowest in the nation and that Marylanders will have a wider choice of plans available to them. We want to ensure that everyone is ready. Our community health centers especially, will grow in their role providing quality healthcare Marylanders," Senator Cardin added.

The Maryland Health Connection is expected to enroll 180,000 of our state's approximately 800,000 uninsured residents through private insurance and 100,000 more through Medicaid within the first year of enrollment, which begins October 1st. An estimated three out of four Marylanders purchasing coverage through the Maryland Health Connection will be eligible for tax credits to reduce the cost of coverage, bringing $7.5 billion in premium and cost sharing tax credits into Maryland during the first five years of the health insurance Exchange.

All health insurance coverage through the Maryland Health Connection and health exchanges across the country include comprehensive care, including outpatient and inpatient care, mental health and substance abuse treatment, laboratory testing and radiology, and prescription drug coverage; emphasis on preventive services, available free of charge; a cap on outof-pocket expenses; and no lifetime or yearly dollar limits on coverage. Thanks to the Affordable Care Act, no one can be rejected due to pre-existing conditions.

The Affordable Care Act is working to lower costs, increase efficiency, and deliver better patient outcomes around the nation. We are already seeing benefits and savings from this legislation: Health care spending grew by 3.9% in 2011, continuing for the third consecutive year the slowest growth rate in 50 years; health-care costs grew slower than the rest of the economy in 2011 for the first time in more than a decade; the proportion of requests for double-digit premium increases plummeted from 75% in 2010 to 14% so far strengthening and expanding in 2013; Medicaid spending per coverage.

beneficiary decreased by 1.9% from 2011 to 2012; Medicare spending per beneficiary grew by only 0.4% in fiscal year 2012. The Affordable Care Act is driving down cost growth while

ERIC D. SNIDER'S IN THE DARK

Movie Review

"Prince Avalanche"

Prince Avalanche Grade: B Rated R, a little profanity, some sexual dialogue 1 hr., 34 min.

Many reviews of Your Highness and The Sitter, two of the more pitiful comedies of 2011, featured concerned inquiries as to what (and in some cases what THE HELL) had happened to those films' director, David Gordon Green. His first four features -- George Washington (2000), All the Real Girls (2003), Undertow (2004), and Snow Angels (2007) -- had been darlings of the indie world, methodical and sensitive stories of ordinary small-town folk. No one begrudged Green his Pineapple Express (2008) because it was funny, and because they assumed he'd eventually get back to the deeper stuff. But that one-two punch in 2011 had people examining Green's head for lobotomy scars.

His seventh film, Prince Avalanche isn't quite a "return to form" (to use an expression only movie critics use), but it is a satisfying step in that direction, a lovely, melancholy little film about loneliness and self-discovery. Except not as unbearable as that sounds. It's actually rather light! Paul Rudd's in it!

A loose remake of an Icelandic film (Either Way), Prince Avalanche stars Rudd and Emile Hirsch as workers on a Texas road crew in 1988, repainting lines and replacing sign posts on rural routes after the devastating wildfire that occurred a year earlier. It's a solitary job: Monday through Friday, Alvin (Rudd) and Lance (Hirsch) are essentially alone. interacting with no one but each other until the weekend comes and they can go home if they

Alvin (Rudd) enjoys the quiet and solitude. He's dating Lance's sister Madison, and he delights

Driven by striking performances from Rudd and Hirsch, Prince Avalanche is an offbeat comedy about two men painting traffic lines on a desolate country highway that's been ravaged by wildfire. Against this dramatic setting, the men bicker and joke with each other, eventually developing an unlikely friendship. Funny, meditative and at times surreal, Prince Avalanche features a score by Explosions in the Sky and David Wingo, and was shot by frequent Green collaborator Tim Orr was. Loosely adapted in each new letter that he receives from her, but what he really loves is being on the move. Lance, who is younger and less circumspect, spends his days feeling stir crazy, bored, and horny. In a letter to Madison, Alvin writes of her brother, "He quite realistically could never amount to anything."

And with that I have conveyed the bulk of the plot. With only two other speaking roles -a gregarious and booze-loving truck driver (Lance LeGault) and an old woman (Joyce Payne) whose house was lost in the fire -- the focus is squarely on Alvin and Lance.

Rudd and Hirsch are up to the challenge, creating believable characters composed of personalities rather than just quirks, and taking us through the stages of their gradually deepening relationship. Alvin thinks Lance is a reckless kid; Lance views

Alvin as a boring, fussy grownup; they both ridicule -- and envy -- what the other has. When their personal crises develop (offscreen), their fragile new bond is tested.

I don't know what the actual process was, but this feels like the sort of intimate, small-scale film where the director had the actors live together for a few weeks before shooting began. Rudd and Hirsch seem comfortable with one another, their different skills meshing into a likable duo. Green's regular cinematographer, Tim Orr, captures many gorgeous, placid images of the natural surroundings, making this the first Green film in six years to qualify as "beautiful."

It's funny, too. And when it isn't funny, at least it isn't too heavy. Maybe this is a lingering effect from Green's last few endeavors -- and not an unwelcome one, either. His earlier movies always had some humor in them, but you wouldn't describe any of them as "comedies," and some were downright Gothic in their darkness. Prince Avalanche isn't an all-out lafffest, but it plays up the humor of Alvin and Lance's odd-couple roommate (tent-mate) situation with a gentle touch.

On the David Gordon Green scale of 1 to 10, with 1 being Pineapple Express and 10 being Snow Angels, Prince Avalanche is about a 6 -- more drama than comedy, but more light than dark. Such a film runs the risk of feeling unimportant or weightless, and certainly no one's going to make a case for this being Green's best work. But if nothing else, it's a reassuring reminder than the Green we used to know -- the contemplative, emotionally fraught one -is still lurking in there some-

"Residents of George's County will be able to double the value of their EBT and nutrition benefits by getting twice the amount of fresh, local produce at the Suitland market.

Farmers market incentive programs like this have proven to be successful across the country, as well as in Maryland.

Market Money is a win-win program that increases buying power for the customer and income for the farmer." -Michele Levy, Director of Eat Fresh Maryland.

This is the first year of the Suitland Farmers Market, orgaby the Suitland Technology Education Engagement Resource (STEER) Center, Inc. of Prince George's County with assistance from the communitybased nonprofit growing SOUL. The goal of the market is to improve food access and have a positive impact on community and individual health. Open each Tuesday from 3

> 4508 Suitland Road, the market offers fresh fruits and vegetables and other food options. The market is located within > p.m. to 7 p.m. rain or shine at walking distance of the Federal Center, and is easily accessible by Metro or bus lines.

Many families in Prince George's County struggle to afford sufficient food for their families to eat. Three out of five County children receive free or reduced-price meals at school, and household participation in SNAP has more than doubled in the last five years.

Also, residential areas nearby the Suitland Farmers Market (such as District Heights, Morningside and Seat Pleasant) have been classified as "food deserts" by the USDA.

Residents of food deserts are often underserved by full-service grocery stores, over servedby fast food restaurants and convenience stores, and lack adequate access to affordable, healthy food.

"The Suitland Farmers Market will make it more convenient and affordable for community members in surrounding areas to buy fresh fruits and vegetables and other items to feed their family.

The Market will offer nutritional and environmental education programs for market participants. We are striving to increase overall health and wellbeing in food desert communities," said Sylvia Quinton, Director of STEER.

The Maryland Market Money initiative is one of seven strategies aimed at reducing chronic disease rates in Prince George's County funded by the Institute for Public Health Innovation (IPHi) through a Community Transformation Grant from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Eat Fresh Maryland (a program of the Crossroads Community Food Network) and the newly formed Maryland Farmers Market Association Program are providing support and technical assistance to implement the program.

"The addition of this market token and incentive program increases access and affordability of healthy, food to area residents with lower incomes and stimulates market success by making it easier for customers to make purchases," said Evelyn Kelly, Program Manager with IPHi. "We look forward to supporting the expansion of these programs throughout the County to increase healthy eating and address obesity rates."

Why Banning Russia from the Olympics is a Terrible, Horrible, No Good, Very Bad Idea

There are few people in the sports world I respect more than Cyd Zeigler the founder of the web-Outsports, which deals with the sporting lives of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender athletes. I tweeted Mr. Zeigler's excellent article titled "Don't Boycott Olympics Ban Russia From Competing Instead" precisely because it was incisive and made me think. I do however feel that on principle I need to state that I strongly disagree with his central premise.

Zeigler's argument is that Russia should be treated as a pariah state not unlike South Africa during the time of apartheid, excluded from most major international sporting

As he writes, "Think a Russian ban is crazy? There's precedent for it. In 1964, the IOC [International Olympic Committee] banned South Africa from participating in the Olympic Games because of apartheid in that nation. The ban remained in force for 28 years, until apartheid ended. Let Russia, as host, watch the games from the sidelines as 200 other nations slide across the ice in Sochi."

I disagree with this demand, even though I oppose with every fiber Putin's brutal crackdown on Russia's LGBT community.

I disagree for three main reasons. First and most obviously, such a move would do far more damage to the Russian athletes themselves, than to Vladamir Putin. If we are against making the athletes political pawns, as Zeigler has written in an article opposing a US boycott, then we should stay true to that no matter the country. Athletes shouldn't have to pay the price for being born in a country abysmal on human rights.

Second is the critical question of who gets to initiate such a powerful demand. Inside the apartheid South Africa cited by Zeigler, there was an actual organization called SANROC, the South African Non-Racialized Olympic Committee that called for their own country's exclusion. SANROC organizers like Dennis Brutus went to jail or were shot in the name of keeping South Africa out of the Olympics and other international sporting events. Black and brown athletes, even when they were the best on the field, were excluded from South Africa's teams. We haven't heard any such a demand from Russia's LGBT athletes or straight athlete allies. If we did, it would change the calculus of this dramatically.

This leads to the third fallacy in the "expel Russia" argument. Zeigler writes, "Instead of asking athletes, coaches and fans to risk disqualification, arrest or worse in Sochi, Russia this winter, it's time for the IOC itself to take a stand."

The IOC couldn't "take a stand" with two crutches and hydraulic lift. It was a flawed body during the Cold War. Now it's a corporate piranha masquerading as Nemo the Clown Fish, tearing countries to pieces under a miasma of soft-headed hooey about "bringing the world together through sports." Asking the IOC to be an ally in the fight against oppression is like asking a scorpion not to sting. The mere fact that the Winter Games are in Putin's Sochi - where the disappearance of 30 billion dollars in Olympic construction costs has elicited barely a pip from the IOC - only shows who they are and where they stand.

This connects to the last and most serious problem with Zeigler's argument. Having forces in the United States and the West - or in the case of the IOC, largely controlled by the United States and the West - telling Russia it can't compete immediately raises a series of thorny questions. Russia's antigay laws are abhorrent. You know what else is abhorrent? The drone and mass-spying program run by United States. Also our deeply racist system of mass incarceration, our treatment of women prisoners, our continued degradation of indigenous people, our record-setting immigrant deportation program, or the fact that in 29 states it's still legal to fire people just because of their sexuality.

The list goes on. This isn't about comparing and contrasting the crimes of East and West. It's about saying that if the only countries allowed in the Olympics had sparkling records on human rights, we'd be watching polar bears race penguins on an ice drift in Antarctica.

The answer in this case lies with what Zeigler dismisses: "asking athletes, coaches and fans to risk disqualification, arrest or worse in Sochi, Russia." Yes it's a lot to ask. It was also a lot to ask of Dennis Brutus when he was shot organizing SANROC. It was a lot to ask John Carlos and Tommie Smith to raise their fists for human rights in 1968. Fighting injustice actually demands having a fight. The IOC won't do it for us. If you stand for LGBT rights, then you need to stand up, pick a side, throw on your rainbow colored gloves, and start fighting. In the end, the story of Sochi will either be the celebration of repression or resistance. The time to organize resistance begins now, with no illusions in the IOC, their corporate sponsors, or the good will of our own government.

New District 9 Bus Transit Service Established! In response to considerable public input from South County residents, your county government has begun a new fixed route bus transit service in District 9. This new service, Route 36, extends from the Clinton Fringe Park and Ride Bus Lot down the MD-5/US-301 corridor to Brandywine Crossing Shopping Center and then connects with Charles County's bus service at the Pinefield Shopping Center. Since the Clinton Fringe Park & Ride Lot already has bus service to Branch Ave. Metro Station, this new Rte. 36 bus service is an alternative to driving to commuting on this corridor by vehicle. If Rte. 36 is used heavily, it could lead to expanded bus service in other parts of District 9. The long-term goal is to establish light rail along this corridor.

Please use this new service early and often!

State Commits $5 Million to Light Rail Project for Prince George's and Charles Counties Prince George's and Charles County leaders have worked with the O'Malley administration to garner a new $5 million commitment from the state towards the establishment of light rail along the MD-5/US-301 corridor. This is a solid first step towards this long-term answer to the significant traffic congestion on this corridor.

EARTH TALK ... Sharing is Caring

Dear EarthTalk:

Some green groups are promoting the simple notion of sharing as a way to green communities and combat waste. Can you explain?

> -- Becky Lipscomb, Centereach, NY

The convergence of environmental awareness and consumer culture has created a whole new movement today whereby sharing is cool. Indeed, some environmentalists view sharing as key to maintaining our quality of life and our sanity in an increasingly cluttered world.

"Sharing is a relatively simple concept and a basic part of human life," reports Janelle Orsi on Shareable, an online magazine that tells the story of sharing. "What's new is that people are applying sharing in innovative and far-reaching ways, many of which require complex planning, new ways of thinking and organizing, and new technologies. In short, people are taking sharing to new levels, ranging from relatively simple applications of sharing to community-wide sharing initiatives—and beyond."

"In a shareable world, things like car sharing, clothing swaps, childcare coops, potlucks, and cohousing make life more fun, green, and affordreports Shareable. "When we share, not only is a better life possible, but so is a better world."

The non-profit Freecycle Network, which runs a Craigslist-style website where people can list items they want to give away, pioneered using the Internet to facilitate diverting reusable goods from landfills when it launched back in 2003. To date, more than nine million individuals across 5,000 different regions have used the group's freecycle.org website to find new homes for old items.

According to Shareable, other examples such as Zipcar, Wikipedia, Kiva and Creative Commons show how successful sharing can be. "They show what's possible when we share. They show that we don't act merely for our own good, but go out of our way to contribute to the common good. They show that we can solve the crises we face, and thrive as never before. They show that a new world is emerging where the more you share the more respect you get, and where life works because everyone helps each other."

Shareable and the Center for a New American Dream, a nonprofit that highlights the connections between consumption, quality of life and the environment, have collaborated on the production of the new "Guide to Sharing," a free downloadable booklet loaded with practical ideas about exchanging stuff, time, skills and space. Some of the ideas in the guide include: organizing a community swap; starting a local toy, seed or tool library; launching a skills exchange where community members can swap professional skills like carpentry or grantwriting; or setting up a food, transportation or gardening coop. Some other sharing tips include car-sharing, gift circles, sharing backyard chickens with neighbors and launching a "free market" where people meet to trade skills and stuff.

For her part, Janelle Orsi envisions a future where public land is dedicated to community gardening, public libraries also lend tools, equipment and other goods, and citywide bike sharing, carpooling and wifi programs are all the rage. Orsi and others warn we had better get used to sharing, as it is here to buses, and other places along the roadway," said John B. Townsend II, AAA Mid-Atlantic's Manager of Public and Government Affairs. "Now that the new school year is starting, the onus is on drivers. We need to get back into our familiar routine and be extra attentive to all traffic laws, especially around school zones."

Area drivers should be mindful of unblinking eye of school zone cameras in Maryland. Last school year Prince George's County deployed in 143 locations. They were expected to ticket lead-footed drivers and yield $13 million in ticket revenue in FY13. Smaller jurisdictions in the county run their own school zone speed camera programs. Montgomery County issued 11,861,157 speed cameras tickets along residential streets and school zones in FY 2011 with a face value of $13, 359, 202 in ticket revenues. Last school year, the County deployed mobile speed camera vans to crack down on motorists barreling through school zones. Speeding is not only a deeplyingrained, bad-driving behavior, it is also commonplace on our roadways and in school zones, cautions AAA Mid-Atlantic.

Unfortunately, that's not the only crime and misdemeanor that drivers commit in school zones, bus stops, or in residential areas teeming with school children. Research shows that many drivers - forty-five percent - don't even bother to come to a complete stop, no matter where they drive, including in school zones and residential areas, warns AAA Mid-Atlantic. On top of that, 37 percent of drivers roll right through the stop sign, and seven percent didn't slow down one bit.

For safety's sake, don't let the school zone become a "danger zone," urges the auto club. "Now that school is back in session, rush hour often means increased congestion and longer commute times," said Townsend. "Motorists should allow for extra travel time when school is in session to avoid any temptation to speed or disobey traffic laws in an effort to 'catch up' after being delayed."

Drivers should be cognizant of the fact the Washington metro region boasts some of the largest public school districts in the entire nation. The students in Prince George's County will kick things off and head back to class, Monday, August 19. So will teachers in Washington, D.C. The following Monday, August 26, is the first day of school for students in Washington, D.C. and Montgomery County, which has the largest school district in the state of Maryland, with 148,779 students. Hush. The school bell will also bellow on that red letter day in Charles County and in Howard County too. On the Virginia side of the Potomac, school begins on September 3, 2013 in most northern Virginia jurisdictions, namely Alexandria, Arlington, Fairfax, Loudoun and Prince William public schools. If your child is young or is walking to new school, walk with them the first week to make sure they know the route and can do it safely, advises the auto club.

Area roadways will be jammed with over 5,000 school buses each day during the 2013-2014 school year. That tally includes 1,520 yellow school buses in Fairfax County alone. Nearly 62 percent of the students enrolled in Montgomery County Public Schools -100,000 students - will travel to the old schoolyard aboard 1,254 school buses daily. They are not alone on area roadways, because nearly 1,250 school buses will be laden with students in Prince George's County. Unfortunately, most local drivers don't think about kids on school buses, or school bus safety, as they drive about the District. Contrariwise, the District has 800 school buses in operation on any given school day.

Charles County is one of Maryland's fastest growing school system, with 334 school buses conveying the county's most precious cargo to 39 schools and educational centers. It is a timely reminder that for tens of thousands of Washington area school children, their school day begins and/or ends with a trip on a school bus. The greatest risk they face is not riding the bus, but approaching or leaving it, the Mid-Atlantic Foundation for Safety and Education.

For the sake of pupils from kindergarten to high school, here's a quick refresher course for local drivers. Flashing yellow lights on a school bus indicate it is preparing to stop to load or unload children, and motorists should slow down and prepare to stop. The red flashing lights and extended stop arms indicate the bus has stopped, and children are getting on and off, the Foundations says.

Motorists are required to stop their vehicles and wait until the red lights stop flashing, the extended stop sign is withdrawn and the bus begins moving before they can start driving again. Area drivers should always heed and obey all state laws and District laws requiring motorists to stop for stopped school buses. In the future, Prince George's County and Montgomery County will finally deploy bus "Stop Arm" cameras to issue hefty fines to drivers who illegal pass stopped buses.

AAA Mid-Atlantic advocates on behalf of its nearly four million members in the District Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. It provides a wide range of personal insurance, travel, financial and automotive services through its 50-plus retail branches, regional operations centers, and the Internet. SCHOOL'S OPEN – DRIVE CAREFULLY!

AAA Mid-Atlantic and the Mid-Atlantic Foundation for Safety and Education offer the following safety tips:

Slow down. Speed limits in school zones are reduced for a reason. A pedestrian struck by a vehicle traveling at 25 mph is nearly two-thirds less likely to be killed compared to a pedestrian struck by a vehicle traveling just 10 mph faster. Slow down, obey crossing guards and watch for flashing bus lights.

Come to a complete stop. Research shows that more than one-third of drivers roll through stop signs in school warn AAA Mid-Atlantic and zones or neighborhoods.

Always come to a complete stop, checking carefully for children on sidewalks and in crosswalks before proceeding.

Eliminate distractions. Research shows that taking your eyes off the road for just two seconds doubles your chances of crashing. Children can be quick, crossing the road unexpectedly or emerging suddenly between two parked cars. Reduce risk by not using your cell phone or eating while driving.

Reverse responsibly. Every vehicle has blind spots. Check for children on the sidewalk, in the driveway and around your vehicle before slowly backing up. Teach your children to never play in, under or around vehicles. At least 50 children in the U.S. are backed over by vehicles every week in the U.S. resulting in two child deaths per week, according to KidsAndCars.org.

Never leave a child in a car.

So far in 2013, 24 children across the country have died after being trapped in an unattended vehicle. Do not leave your children alone in a running vehicle with the air conditioner on even for a few minutes; your child may put the car into drive or even get caught in a closing power window, not to mention that you increase the risk of your car being stolen and your child abducted. If your spouse or a guardian is taking your children to daycare or school ask them to call you to make sure the drop-off went according to plan. Watch for bicycles. Children on bikes are often inexperienced, unsteady and unpredictable. Slow down and allow at least three feet of passing distance between your vehicle and a bicyclist. If your child rides a bicycle to school, require that he or she wear a properly fitted bicycle helmet on every ride - in many states it's the law. es are the leading cause of death for teens in the United States, and more than one in four fatal crashes involving teen drivers occur during the after-school hours of 3 p.m. to 7 p.m. Get evidence-based guidance and tips AAA.com/Teen Driving
